and scorn of the rich, He befriended them. There were men who were morally and spiritually poor who had lost treasure in comparison with which a purse is but trash. He was especially kind to these. The poorest people in all Palestine were the Samaritans. For four hundred years they had been ostracised and hated by the Jews. The capital of Samaria was called a city of fools. A Samaritan was not considered so good as a dog. For many generations the Samaritans had been steadily ignored. A Samaritan was at the end of the procession: and so it was to a Samaritan that the first clear disclosure of His Messiahship was made. The Samaritan chosen to receive the revelation was not a man but a woman, for a Samaritan woman was lower down in the scale than a Samaritan man. She was nothing but a toy or a slave, in whose soul the Rabbis had no interest. And so Jesus preached His gospel first of all to a Samaritan woman. She was not a lady, but a jaded, ignorant woman, mentally unfurnished and morally bankrupt. She had neither education, nor character, nor reputation. Of all the human beings who were at that time upon the stage of action, this woman was as low as the lowest. To her first of all He announced the fact that He was the Messiah, and to her He explained what kind of worship is acceptable to the Eternal. A certain woman was there who had an infirmity for a long time, and when Jesus saw her He had compassion on her and said to her: "Wilt thou be made whole?" His heart went out always to the Samaritans. The religious teachers of His day were experts in handling scripture, but they were blind to the needs of men, so one day he told a story in which a man naked and half dead is neglected by a priest and a Levite and rescued by a Samaritan, who chances to pass that way. To the complacent and self-satisfied scribe who listens to the story, Jesus says, pointing to the figure of the Samaritan, "Go, do thou likewise." His tenderness for the Samaritans was never forgiven by the Jews. When Jesus attempted to preach in the streets of Jerusalem men hooted at Him and stabbed Him with the venomous taunt: "You are a Samaritan and have a devil!"

In Galilee and Judea the men lowest in the social scale were Publicans. They were the custom house officers of Palestine. They collected Jewish money for Cæsar's treasury, and hence were counted renegades and traitors. Like all reputed traitors they were treated with contumely and scorn. Jesus' heart went out to the Publicans. He ate with them in their homes. Men in consternation asked His disciples the reason why their Master ate with Publicans. So unusual a phenomenon demanded instant explanation. By and by it became a remark tossed from mouth to mouth: "He is a friend of Publicans."

But the frowns and criticisms of the good people of His day never swerved Jesus from His course. He was the steadfast friend of the unpopular and of all upon whom society refused to smile. One day when passing through the city of Jericho, the most unpopular man in all the town climbed into a tree to see him. He was rich, and he was a Publican. Jesus looked up into his face and said: "Come down, Zaccheus, I will dine with you to-day." He said it in the hearing of a great crowd. He said it, remember, in the priestly city of Jericho, where social lines were drawn more tightly than anywhere else in all Palestine, and where class hatred was most venomous, because sanctified by the sanction of the professed leaders of religion. There were two men in Palestine who were especially conspicuous and noteworthy: at the one end of society stood the Pharisee, at the other end stood the Publican. Jesus pictures both men praying in the Temple, and lo! the Publican goes home justified rather than the Pharisee! Oh, the divine audacity of this man! He erects twelve thrones, and on each throne He places a man who shall judge one of the twelve tribes of Israel, and when the world looked to see who the men were, behold one of them was a Publican! And there the Publican has sat for nineteen centuries, and there he will sit to the end of time, reminding us ever of the consoling fact that out of the world's neglected and outcast classes can come, and will forever come, regenerating forces for the redemption of the race.

But why need I dwell on these things? The time would fail me if I should tell you of the lepers whom He healed, of the blind men to whom He gave sight, of the insane men among the tombs to whom He gave a sound mind, of the miserable outcasts whom He loved back to life again. What is the New Testament but a description of Bethesda, the house of mercy, with Jesus at the center of it, saying to the most helpless and hopeless of all the impotent folk that lie there: "Rise and walk"? The French artist, Tissot, seized upon the core of the gospel when he painted the picture of Jesus wearing the crown of thorns sitting on the steps of a ruined temple holding His bleeding brow over the shoulders of two poor peasants, who, footsore and weary, have sat down there in the gloom of their great desolation.

And what He did He told his followers to do: "Go to the lost sheep, heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out demons, when you give a dinner invite the people overlooked by others, if you want to be great you must be the servant of all." When John the Baptist, shut up in prison, began to wonder why Jesus did not march straight onward and seize the reins of power, and sent a messenger asking: "Art thou He that was to come, or shall we look for another?" Jesus sent back in substance this luminous reply: "Tell John I have tarried behind at the pool of Bethesda with the man who has had an infirmity thirty and eight years. I am caring for the people who are impotent and discouraged at the end of the procession." That was the proof that He came down from heaven. To take care of the man for whom nobody cares and to give strength to the man who has lost courage and hope, God Himself cannot do a diviner thing than that! Some great deliverer standing at the pool of Bethesda saying to the man who is without a friend or a hope, "Rise and walk" is the world's ideal Messiah, the one for whom weary ages have looked long and waited. "Follow Me," "Follow Me," "Follow Me," so He said to all who were willing to listen, and when they looked up they saw Him going always toward Bethesda. The disciple must be like his Master, and the servant must obey his Lord. "Why call ye Me Lord if ye do not the things which I say? Ye are My friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. I have given you an example." Knowing that in a little while the world would see Him no more He breathed the ruling ideas of His soul into a few simple words, which will shine like constellations with steady and saving light on the world's dark path forever. The "lost sheep," the "lost coin," the "lost son," the half dead traveler between Jerusalem and Jericho, the neglected beggar at the gate: are these not the fixed stars by which humanity must guide its course? All through His life our Lord could not look upon a crowd without being moved with compassion for them. He loved men from the beginning, He loved them to the end. The last day He spent in the temple he gave immortality to a poor lonely woman who had timidly dropped two bits of copper into the treasury. He noticed her because she was at the end of the procession of all who gave gifts. On the cross He threw around the poor, benighted soldiers, neglected servants of Cæsar's court, as they drove the nails through His hands, the healing folds of a loving prayer. And when at last He stepped from this world into paradise He carried a robber in His arms. "Therefore God has highly exalted Him and given Him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

Why did Jesus show this vast concern for the neglected and the apparently worthless? He saw in every man the image of God. Every man to Him was a child of God. By birth man belongs to the Heavenly Father. In his heart are the possibilities of the life eternal. In his soul are wrapped up powers which will unfold forever. Believing this there was in Jesus' eyes round every man the romance of the infinite. There was in every heart the mystery of eternity. Every man in the innumerable multitude which have moved across the earth from the cradle to the grave, from the age of ice to the present hour, no matter what his race, his nationality, his color, his rank or social condition, has been and is the child of God, created in His image, fitted for communion with Him, entrusted with vast responsibilities, the heir of an immeasurable destiny. That was the belief of Jesus, and if His belief is without foundation then the New Testament is robbed of its luster and Golgotha loses its meaning. The foundation truth of Christianity is the infinite worth of man.

This conviction of man's greatness is the key which unlocks the mystery of the tragedy of Jesus' life. His great quarrel with His nation was that His countrymen were inhuman. The inhumanity of the so-called best people of His day stirred Him to pity and fiery-eyed indignation. The land was full of religion, but it lacked the milk of human kindness. The scribes and Pharisees had their eyes glued on institutions, books, ceremonies. They had lost interest in man. To them the Sabbath was more than a human being, the temple was more than a human body, a sacrifice was more than the good will of a brother man, a contribution to the temple was more than filial devotion to one's parents. The good people of His day were punctilious in regard to ablutions and fastings and prayers, but they had lost the heart that pities. "Go learn what this means," He said to the crowd of quibblers. "I desire mercy and not sacrifice." "You pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith." This was His terrible and crushing arraignment. His entire life was spent in picking up men whom the world had knocked over and speaking kindly to men who had been shoved into a corner, and whispering words of hope into the ears of men whom the Jewish church had labeled "lost," and who had been cast out by public opinion into the outer darkness. His one supreme purpose was to induce the world to believe first in the fatherhood of God, and secondly in the sonship of man. There is no more pathetic question in the scriptures than: "Is not a man better than a sheep?" It flashes light on the heartlessness of the Jewish church of the first century.

But is not all this elementary? It most certainly is. It is nothing more than the A B C's of Christianity. But there is nothing so imperatively needed to-day as the remastering of the Christian alphabet. We need of all things else a restatement of the Christian doctrine of man. For the materialistic interpretation of life has gone everywhere, and in many quarters the Christian conceptions are trampled under foot. Many forces have conspired to produce confusion, and many a fixed star of hope has been dissipated into mist. Within the last fifty years the world has gone through a revolution greater than any since the days of Luther. It is not surprising that men walk confused and need to re-examine the deep foundations on which humanity must forever build.

Science, by lifting up the heavens and pushing out the horizons, has given a new pathos to the age-long question: What is man that Thou art mindful of him? Man is so little compared with the bulk of the universe the temptation is to reckon him insignificant. Because the worlds are so many and the ages are so vast, the incarnation has to some become incredible. But with the lowering of the dignity of Christ comes inevitably the lowering of the dignity of us all. If our Elder Brother is not what He says He is, then we, His younger brethren, are not certain where we stand. A humanitarianism that builds on a Christ less than the Son of the Living God is a humanitarianism as impotent as the man at Bethesda, and as evanescent as the morning cloud and the early dew which passeth away.

The creation and expansion of machinery has brought about a reconstruction of the entire industrial world. Populations gathered from vast areas have been massed in great centers, and in the roar of machinery the human voice has been drowned, and in the processes of production the human heart has been forgotten. Do we not talk of "hands"? We are in danger of forgetting we are a nation of "souls."

The principle of competition, owing to the breaking down of national barriers, has gotten into a world-wide arena, and is working with an intensity and momentum unparalleled and astounding. Under the principle of competition the race is to the swift and the battle is to the strong. Men are piling up wealth in comparison with which the wealth of Crœsus was a widow's mite, while other men, children of the same God, are crowded down into the slums, there to welter and rot at the bottom of great cities. It was the stars which caused David to ask: "What is man that Thou art mindful of him?" It is human eyes peering at us from the doors and windows of tall houses in crowded alleys and narrow streets which bring from our heart the same pathetic and puzzled cry. With the world thundering on at its present rate we are in danger of forgetting the man at Bethesda. We have forgotten him many times already. We forgot him a hundred years ago. If we had not forgotten him we should not now blush over "A Century of Dishonor." We forgot him fifty years ago, and because we did forget him it was necessary that every drop of blood shed by the lash should be paid for by blood drawn by the sword. We forgot him only the other day. He was in a mine, and we could not see him, and so we hurried on and built our civilization on the product of that man's labor, never thinking of him or his wife, or of his children, even though every one of them is a child of God. The other day that man quit working, but we paid no attention to his action. He was only a Slav, and his bad humor, we thought, would quickly subside. But to our surprise he persisted in his refusal to work, and little by little the pillars of the republic began to tremble. The wheels in factories and mills ceased to turn. The hands of that Slav were on them. Schoolhouses began to close—that Slav had kept them open. Sick people in many an humble home began to feel the pinch of cold—the Slav had been ministering unto them. The poor in great cities began to moan, and the Chief Magistrate of the republic confessed: "The situation is intolerable." That unnoticed foreigner, hundreds of feet under ground, had by his labor made life comfortable and pleasant to millions who had never seen him. He has called for help repeatedly for many years, but no one went to his assistance. By refusing to work he compelled the world to look at him. Men to-day are computing the cost of the strike. They say it has cost the nation a hundred and eighty millions of dollars. How much additional it has cost in suffering no one knows, but this is certain, the strike was worth all it has cost if it fixes the eyes of the nation on the men who spend their lives in the mines. They are our brethren. Christ died for them. They toil for us. If they are foreigners and ignorant and depraved and dangerous, then their claim upon us is all the greater. If the miner is at the rear end of the procession our Lord is by his side. It is His prayer that we may be with Him where He is and behold His glory. Paul could not have been mistaken when he said that if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of His. The measure of a man's Christianity is not his attitude to the man above him, or to the man on his own level, but to the man who is below him. How do we feel toward the man who is at the rear end of the procession? That is the test of our devotion to Christ.

We are living in a hurried age. There are still twelve hours in a day, but what are they among so many tasks and pleasures? A hurried age is always in danger of becoming superficial. The temptation is to make much of the distinctions which lie altogether on the surface. Ours is pre-eminently an age of luxury and material splendor. Dives cut a large figure in the public eye. It is written that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth, but many people have never read that sentence, and many of us who have read it do not believe it. Men all around us are pulling down their barns and building larger ones, and saying to themselves and their wives and children: "Let us eat, drink and be merry through all the years." The tragic folly of all this does not impress us. We jingle our gold in our pockets and say with childish glee: "We are the richest nation on the earth," forgetting that it is required in stewards that they be found faithful. In this age when we are so busily engaged in weighing our gold and our silver and our copper, our grain and our merchandise and our fortunes, we need a fresh vision of the Man who threw a man into one pan of the scales and the world into the other pan declaring that one man outweighs the world.

We need a fresh vision of Jesus Christ and Him crucified. That is a great declaration which St. Paul makes in his second letter to the Corinthians: "Wherefore henceforth we know no man after the flesh." Is this the man who saw Stephen die, and who traveled all the way to Damascus to crush out the religion of the Nazarene? This is the man, and yet not the man, for Paul has become a new creature. Old things have passed away and all things have become new. He has entered upon a new era. He has seen the risen Christ and has grasped the significance of His death. Christ died for all. That is a great word "all." It is a word which sweeps away distinctions and burns up limitations. It has in it something of the wideness of God's mercy. It is like the heavens, it bends soft and gracious over every head. Christ died for all—wherefore we know no man after the flesh. "There is neither Jew nor Greek." Race distinctions are all abolished. Who is saying this? A Hebrew of the Hebrews in whose blood there run the inherited prejudices of a thousand years. Yes, he says there is neither Jew nor Greek. The chasm has been bridged by the death of Jesus. "There is neither bond nor free." Social distinctions are rendered insignificant. Who says this? A Jew. Greece loved the beautiful, but she never saw that it was beautiful that all men should be brothers. Rome prided herself on her love of justice, but she was never fair to the slaves. Saul of Tarsus lays one hand on the shoulder of Philemon, and the other on the shoulder of Onesimus, and says to the master, "Receive your slave as a brother beloved." Christianity begins not by taking the manacles from the wrist, but by removing the prejudices from the heart. Sooner or later the fetters are dissolved in the fervent heat of that great word brother. If it be true that God's only Son died for all, then all these distinctions with which the world is filled are of slight importance.

Can we say as Christian men and women that we know no man after the flesh? Have we allowed the death of Jesus to blot out the distinctions which estrange? Race hatred is to-day virulent and furious on both sides the sea. Class distinctions and class alienations are everywhere in evidence, and everywhere they retard the coming of the golden age. There is a caste system in America almost as deeply entrenched, and probably as difficult to annihilate, as the caste system of India. Even our churches ofttimes have a tendency to drive classes further apart, and to keep alive antagonisms which ought to die. If there is one truth above all others which needs to be uttered to-day with passionate and reiterated emphasis it is the truth that one is our Master and that we are all brethren. To talk about "foreigners" with the accent of scorn is wholly unchristian; to speak the word "American" in a tone which casts a shadow over the rest of the world is altogether pagan; to speak about the "ignorant masses," the "unwashed herd" with intonations of contempt is to fall into the ditch into which the Pharisees tumbled. There is too much ado about badges and ranks and distinctions, and not enough genuine good will and brotherly love.

And because we do not believe in the infinite worth of man we are harassed by fears and are subject to distressing panics. We hear much to-day of perils. Some men cry aloud because of the "yellow peril," and others shudder at the "black peril," while others are affrighted by the "white peril." Believe that man is the son of God no matter what his race or what the color of his skin, and there is no peril which cannot be safely met and surely conquered. Whence proceeds the note of discouragement which is sounded so frequently in these days? From our lack of faith in man. The work is long and arduous, there are many delays and many failures. What we do we know not now, but we shall know hereafter. But who can faint or falter, no matter what the discouragements may be, who believes that every man is a child of God, redeemed by the blood of God's only Son, and was created to walk in the ways of righteousness and peace? When men say, what are you going to do with the red man? what do you expect to do with the black man? what are you going to do with the yellow man? our answer is, we propose to treat him like a man. By dealing with him as though he were a son of God it will be made clear in God's good time what place he is to fill in the processes of carrying the world onward toward "that far-off divine event toward which the whole creation moves." Christ's faith in man, I think, was more wondrous far than His faith in God. How he trusted man! "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." He was certain that to the appeal of love the race of men will certainly respond. He threw His words into the air, and said they would never pass away, certain that man's hungry heart would catch them and treasure them up forever. He rolled the world upon the shoulders of twelve weak men, expecting them to carry the world to God. He said to the man at Bethesda, who was without strength and without hope: "Rise, and walk."

"A certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years." That is not all. If that were all then were the future dark indeed. "And Jesus saw him." That is the revelation which Christianity has brought us. By the side of the man who is infirm there stands the strong Son of God. Our salvation lies in remembering that He is there. It is fitting to-night that we should take the bread and wine in remembrance of Him. We need to remember Him as the Good Samaritan, the Good Shepherd, the Great Physician, the Friend of Sinners, the Saviour who gives His life a ransom for many, and one who stands at Bethesda and says to men, "Rise, and walk."

We come to-night to the Lord's Supper by invitation of the American Missionary Association, a society which was organized at the foot of the cross, and which has done all of its work within sight of the Man who went about doing good. For fifty-six years it has stood at the pool of Bethesda, and whenever a man has appeared there who has had no resources, either without or within, it has extended a helping hand. It has ever kept its eye on the man at the rear end of the procession. If a race has become impotent and lost hope, or if a race has been maltreated and left half dead by the road, or if a race has been simply ignored by the conquering races in their onward sweep toward supremacy and glory, this Association, like a strong-limbed servant of God has come to the rescue, and has said, "In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, stand up and walk." I suppose all historians would agree in saying that since the discovery of America, the five most neglected men on the American continent have been the red man, the black man, the yellow man, the white man among the mountains, and the white man amid the snows. These are the men under whom the American Missionary Association has placed its strong arms, and into whose heart it has breathed the spirit of Christ. Other organizations have done great things in His name, but none has been truer to His spirit, or imitated more closely the method of His work. And if organizations are to be judged as men are judged, and if the tests applied to individuals can be applied to men when massed together, then the time is coming when to this society will be addressed the glorious greeting: "Come, ye blessed of My Father." For on the last great day the white man from the mountains will say: "I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat;" the man from the snows will say: "I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink;" the red man will say: "I was naked, and ye clothed me;" the yellow man will say: "I was a stranger, and ye took me in;" the black man will say: "I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me;" and when these voices have died away there will fall upon the silence the music of a voice which is sovereign, saying: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these My brethren, ye did it unto Me."

BRIEF HISTORY.

Organization. The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846. It is distinctively a Christian missionary society to spread the gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity. It was organized with pronounced opposition to slavery, which then existed, and against all race and caste prejudice, which still exists. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the Amistad Committee, the Union Missionary Society, the Committee for West India Missions among the recently emancipated slaves of Jamaica, and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society for work among the American Indians.

In the foreign field, in 1854, its laborers numbered seventy-nine, located in West Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt among the Copts, Canada among the colored refugees and in North America among the Indians.

The home departments embraced two distinct fields, the West and the South. There were 112 home missionaries employed by the Association in 1860, fifteen of them being located in the slave states and in Kansas.

The missions in the slave states gave rise to some of the most stirring events in the history of the Association, which has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts, while slavery existed, to organize churches and schools in the South on an avowedly anti-slavery basis.

Among the Negroes. The crisis so long impending came at length, and the Union armies, entering the South in 1861, opened the way for the instruction and elevation of the colored people. The Association felt itself providentially prepared to engage in this work, and the first systematic effort for their relief was made by it. Large numbers of "contrabands," or escaping fugitive slaves, were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, Va., and were homeless and destitute. The Association, on the 17th of September, 1861, established the first day-school among the freedmen. That little school laid the foundation for the Hampton Institute which the Association founded later, and was the forerunner of the hundreds that have followed.

The Proclamation of Emancipation, dated January 1, 1863, insured the permanent freedom of Negroes who reached the Union lines. The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Norfolk, the school of the previous year now numbered 1,200 pupils. Teachers were also sent to Newbern and Roanoke Island, N. C., to Beaufort, Hilton Head, St. Helena and Ladies' Island, S. C., and to St. Louis, Mo.; and its force was scattered over the field held by our armies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.

Close of the War. Freedmen's Bureau. Boston Council. The year 1865 was marked by the close of the Civil War, by the establishment, by act of Congress, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the holding of a National Council of Congregational Churches in Boston, which recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted to carry it forward. The Association accepted the responsibility, appointed district secretaries at Chicago, Cincinnati and Boston, and collecting agents in other portions of the Northern states. It also solicited funds in Great Britain, and succeeded in securing that year a little more than the $250,000 recommended by the Council. Its receipts from all sources ran up from $47,828 in 1861, to $253,045 in 1866, and $420,769 in 1870.

But in the South there came a reign of terror under the infamous Ku-Klux-Klans—the Thugs of America. The colored people were often assaulted by mobs, dragged from their homes at midnight, and shot down in the streets. But there was no want of courage on the part of our teachers to enter or remain in the field; the number of teachers, which was 320 in 1865, was enlarged to 528 in 1867, 532 in 1868, and 533 in 1870.

Permanent Educational Institutions. It was during this very period that the beginnings were made for most of our permanent educational institutions. The Association must train the teachers and preachers for this people.

The Association now sustains as higher institutions, Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas, and J. S. Green College, Georgia, together with forty-three normal and graded schools and thirty common schools scattered over the South and among the mountains, six schools among the Indians, twenty among the Chinese on the Pacific Coast, one in Alaska and two in Porto Rico.

Theological departments have also been established in Howard University, Fisk University, Talladega College and Straight University. Industrial instruction first began in Southern mission schools in Talladega, Ala., and was early introduced into many of our schools and has been constantly extended. Talladega College and Tougaloo University have large farms. In all the larger institutions and normal schools mechanical arts are taught to the boys, and household work, cooking, sewing, washing, nursing, etc., to the girls. From these schools go forth annually hundreds of well-qualified teachers and ministers.

Church Planting. Simultaneously with the founding of these permanent institutions, the Association began the planting of churches among the freedmen. They were formed mainly in connection with the educational institutions, and were intended to be models of true church life. The work of church planting has been pressed forward with a steady hand until the churches now number 254, located in nearly all the states of the South, among the Negroes, the mountaineers and the Indians, with most fruitful results. Sunday-schools, temperance efforts and revivals of religion have been marked features in the work. Christian Endeavor Societies were promptly organized and have been rapidly multiplied.

Conferences or associations have been formed, and of these there are now nine, designated as the Conferences of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Mountain Work. The early labors of the Association in home mission work were directed to the white people of the West and South. The mountain region of the Central South embraces West Virginia, southwestern Virginia, southeastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee and portions of northern Georgia and northern Alabama. It is 500 miles long and 200 miles wide, and contains a population of about 2,000,000, seven-eighths of whom are white. Churches, preaching stations or schools have been established along or near the line of railroads traversing the mountain districts of Kentucky and Tennessee, and sweeping nearly across both states; in Kentucky, at Williamsburg, Pleasant View, Corbin, Spradling, Combs and Campton; in Tennessee, at La Follette, Pomona, Grand View, Pleasant Hill, Bon Air and Mill Creek; in North Carolina, at McClurds, Whittier and Blowing Rock; in Alabama, at Nat (Bending Oaks) and Joppa. The Sunday-school work in these districts renders most efficient service in laying the foundation for churches and day-schools, and in promoting the cause of temperance.

The Indians. Some of the earliest labors of the Association were among the Indians. In 1852 it had twenty-one missionaries stationed among the Indians of the Northwest. Various causes conspired to the gradual diminution of these missions. But in 1882 an arrangement was made with the American Board by which it transferred to the Association its Indian missions in this country, and the Association withdrew from missions in foreign lands. At the time of the transfer the Association had missions at S'kokomish, Wash., Leach Lake, Minn., and Spokane Falls. The transfer from the Board committed to its care the mission and school at the Santee Agency, Neb., Oahe, S. D., with outlying stations on the Cheyenne and White Rivers, and the mission and school at Fort Berthold, N. D. Since these missions and schools came under the care of the Association the facilities and force of workers have been increased, and missions have been added at Fort Yates, N. D.; Rosebud, S. D.; the Crow Agency, Mont., and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency, Oklahoma. The churches number twenty, with a membership of 1,453. Schools number six, with 342 pupils. The out-stations number fifty-three.

Alaska. Our Alaskan Mission at Cape Prince of Wales was formed in 1890. It is now entirely supported by the special contributions sent to our treasury for this purpose. In connection with the educational and mission work a herd of reindeer is in the care of a missionary. The report of our missionaries in Alaska presents a very hopeful picture of work among the Eskimos.

Chinese in America. The American Missionary Association was one of the pioneers in mission service among the Chinese immigrants to California. It began the work as early as 1852. In 1874 Dr. W. C. Pond, pastor of the Bethany Church, San Francisco, was appointed superintendent.

The number of workers is forty-four, and schools twenty, located at Berkeley, Fresno, Fruitland, Los Angeles, Marysville, Oakland, Oroville, Pasadena, Petaluma, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Vernondale, two at Santa Cruz, and three in San Francisco.

Over a thousand of these pagans have come into the Christian life, and a number of them have returned to their native land as missionaries.

The converted Chinamen have long desired the establishment of missions in their native country, to which, if they should return thither, they might resort as a Christian home, and from which they might go forth for mission work among their countrymen. The Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions, and which was organized in 1886, and commenced work in China in 1890, has already contributed above $15,000 to missions in China. With this they have established headquarters at Canton with property worth $40,000. They have also property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty years' lease of a good chapel in Ci Ning City, where they have organized a church.

Porto Rico. The American Missionary Association follows the flag. It did this in the Civil War, bringing the blessings of Christian instruction to the Negroes. It followed the same course at the close of the war with Spain. Porto Rico came under the flag and became a part of the national territory. The responsibility for the Christian instruction of the people fell with especial force upon our American churches. The American Missionary Association carefully investigated the field through representatives who were sent to the island. The need was found to be very great. There was an immediate demand for well-appointed Christian schools for the instruction of children and youth, and also for the preaching of a broad and free gospel to the people. In 1899 eight teachers were sent to this field to establish and maintain these schools, and an evangelist to preach the gospel as widely as possible throughout the island. Four churches, with 463 members, are now organized.

Two schools have been established. One is located at Santurce, near San Juan, a strategic position for a large work; the other is at Lares, in the western portion of the island. The pastors also hold a circuit of preaching stations through the eastern portion of the island, where there are scarcely any other missionary efforts. There is great need for increased income to the Association to meet the demands of this large and growing field.

Bureau of Woman's Work. Formed in 1883. It gives direction and efficiency to the various lines of women's aid to the American Missionary Association. Women's State Missionary Unions and organizations co-operate in raising funds for the prosecution of the work of the Association.

Publications. The American Missionary magazine is issued in ten monthly numbers by this Association each year. It contains fresh information from the mission fields, the reports of importance of various committees and other matters of value to those studying these great mission fields. The magazine is published at fifty cents per year. It is generously illustrated, and presents in new form fresh material in each issue.

Large numbers of interesting leaflets are also published by this Association. These leaflets bring the most recent information obtainable and must stir missionary enthusiasm. They are issued for general use, and are distributed as desired among the constituents and those interested in the great national and religious problems. Communications should be directed to the editor.

The American Missionary Association.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. I. This Society shall be called the American Missionary Association.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own country and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Members of evangelical churches may be constituted members of this Association for life by the payment of thirty dollars into its treasury, with the written declaration at the time or times of payment that the sum is to be applied to constitute a designated person a life member; and such membership shall begin sixty days after the payments shall have been completed. Other persons, by the payment of the same sum, may be made life members, without the privilege of voting.

Every evangelical church which has within a year contributed to the funds of this Association, and every State or local Conference or Association of such churches, may appoint two delegates to the Annual Meeting of the Association; such delegates, duly attested by credentials, shall be members of the Association for the year for which they were thus appointed.

The pastor of any evangelical church contributing to the funds of the Association within a year is thereby constituted a voting member for that year.

ART. IV. The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be held in the month of October or November, at such time and place as may be designated by the Association, or, in case of failure to act, by the Executive Committee, by notice printed in the official publication of the Association for the preceding month.

ART. V. The officers of this Association shall be a President, five Vice-Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, Auditors and an Executive Committee consisting of the President (ex-officio) and fifteen members, all of whom shall be elected by ballot as hereinafter provided.

The President, Vice-Presidents, Recording Secretary and Auditors shall be elected each year by the Association at its Annual Meeting.

At each Annual Meeting, after the adoption of this Article of the Constitution, three members of the Executive Committee shall be elected for the term of five years, and such other members as shall be required to fill vacancies. No member of the Executive Committee who has served one full term of five years shall be eligible for re-election until one year shall have passed.

The Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries and the Treasurer shall be elected each year by the Association upon nomination of the Executive Committee.

ART. VI. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds, the appointing, counseling, sustaining and dismissing of missionaries and agents and the selection of missionary fields. They shall have authority to fill all vacancies in their own membership or in the officers of the Association occurring between the annual meetings until the next annual meeting; to apply to any Legislature for acts of incorporation or conferring corporate powers; to make provision, when necessary, for disabled missionaries and for the widows and children of deceased missionaries, and in general to transact all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies. The acts of the Committee shall be subject to the revision of the annual meeting.

Five members of the Committee constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VII. No person shall be made an officer of the Association who is not a member of some evangelical church.

ART. VIII. Missionary bodies and churches or individuals may appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. IX. No amendment will be made to this Constitution except by the vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting at an Annual Meeting, notice of the amendment having been given at a preceding Annual Meeting.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to employ an expert accountant to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with his statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statements when approved by the accountant. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. This book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the members of the Executive Committee and the record shall be so added to and amended, from time to time, under the direction of the Finance Committee, as to show at all times a correct statement of the property of the Association, and of any special trusts in its hands. This Committee shall, when occasion requires, direct the sale and transfer of stocks, invest any funds of the Association, not required or designed for current expenses, and in general shall have the oversight of financial concerns of the Association, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Missions to report to the Executive Committee, at its regular meeting every month, such suggestions or proposed action as shall seem to it desirable for furthering the efficiency and economy of the missionary and educational work of the Association. Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee) and consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in May or June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its own work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Chairmen of the three Standing Committees.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES may be appointed from time to time as required. Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee. All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

APPEALS—Every appointee of the Association has the fullest liberty of appeal to the Executive Committee. Such communications shall be referred to the appropriate Committee according to the part of the field from which they come, for examination and a report on the matter involved, at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, when they shall receive careful attention in executive session.

ART IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, except that which relates immediately to the Treasurer's department, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various Standing Committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient work of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of each member of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees, and to the Executive Committee, all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

All appointments of missionaries, whether they are to act as pastors or general missionaries, presidents and professors of chartered institutions, principals of high and normal schools, district secretaries, field superintendents and other agents, and all matters involving questions of property or affecting the policy of the Association, shall be referred to the Executive Committee for final action.

ance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to endorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purpose of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them; to conduct the correspondence relating immediately to his department, and to perform such other acts as are necessary to the faithful execution of the duties of his office.

His books of account and vouchers for payments shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

ART. VI.—DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches and in other ways disseminate information concerning the condition and needs of the Association throughout the districts assigned to them. They shall also collect funds, and perform such other duties as may be required. They shall keep in constant conference with the New York office and every month shall send to it, for the Executive Committee, a report of their work the previous month and of the condition of the interests of the Association in their several districts.

ART. VII.—CHECKS AND PAYMENTS.

All checks upon the bank accounts of the Association may be signed by (1) the Chairman (or Vice-Chairman or Temporary Chairman) of the Executive Committee, (2) a Corresponding Secretary, or (3) the Treasurer. Any two of these signatures shall render a check valid, but no check shall be valid with one signature only. All transfers of stock, conveyances of real estate and other instruments requiring the seal of the Association shall be signed in the same manner.

All payments of the Association shall be made by check payable to order, except petty cash expenditures, which shall be paid by the Treasurer and at convenient times be aggregated, and a check shall be drawn to his order therefor.

No disbursement shall be made without authority of the Executive Committee.

ART. VIII.—CLAIMS FOR DISBURSEMENTS BY OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

All claims for disbursements by any officer or employee shall be accompanied by vouchers, except for telegrams, postage and traveling expenses, and charges below twenty dollars in amount, all of which shall be certified by the claimant to the Treasurer, with the items.

AIM AND WORK.

To preach the gospel to the poor. It originated in a sympathy with the almost friendless slaves, and in its work recognizes no distinction of race or color. Since emancipation, it has devoted its main efforts to the South, endeavoring to prepare the FREEDMEN for their duties as citizens and Christians in America, and as missionaries in Africa. It also establishes missions and schools on the anti-caste basis among the WHITES, especially in the mountain districts. As closely related to this, it seeks to benefit the caste-persecuted CHINESE in America, and to extend the blessings of the gospel and civilization to the INDIANS of North America. In view of the necessity of elevating the WOMEN of these races, the Association has a BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK, to which it especially invites the co-operation of the Christian women of the churches.

MEMBERSHIP.

A payment of THIRTY DOLLARS will constitute a person a life member. (See Article III of the Constitution.)

LEGACIES.

Important legacies have been lost to the Association by informality. Care should be taken to give full name, "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION." The following form of bequest may be used:

I GIVE AND BEQUEATH the sum of———dollars to "The American Missionary Association," incorporated by act of the Legislature of the State of New York.

The will should be attested by three witnesses (in some states three are required—in other States only two), who should write against their names their places of residence (if in cities the street and number.) The following form of attestation will answer for every State in the Union: "Signed, sealed, published and declared by the said (A. B.,) as his last will and testament in the presence of us, who at the request of said (A. B.,) and in his presence, and in the presence of each other have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses." In some States it is required that charitable bequests should be made at least two months before the death of the testator; but this rule does not apply to bequests in the State of New York to this Association.

Beard as Honorary Secretary and Editor of the Association. In connection with this recommendation, the Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, of Michigan, offered the following minute and resolutions:

The retiring of the Rev. Augustus Field Beard, D.D., from the Senior Secretaryship of the American Missionary Association is an occasion of more than ordinary moment.

For seventeen years this Association has profited by his inspiring personality, his keen judgment and his sagacious leadership. Loyal, with chivalrous fidelity to the principles of this Association, unsparing in the sacrificial offering of his whole self to its interests, he has been conspicuously "one who never turned his back, but marched straight forward, never doubting clouds would break."

Beneath his wise and progressive administration the entire educational work of the Association has been reconstructed and given an enviable position among kindred endeavors; standards have been raised; teachers, schools and scholars multiplied, till to-day this Association enjoys a pre-eminence never before achieved.

Personally, as a Christian man, a friend, an adviser, a fellow secretary, Dr. Beard has won his permanent residence in the hearts of all those who during these years have shared in any way the responsibilities and perplexing duties of this mighty work. Therefore,

Resolved, I. That this Association congratulates Dr. Beard upon the abounding fruit of his manifold labors, and honors him as a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

II. That we bear our grateful testimony to those qualities of mind and heart which in his life have made him efficient in his work and loved by his brethren.

III. That we recognize the significance of his achieving endeavors, in the widening, deepening work of this Association, and record our gratitude to God for the gift of these long years of fidelity, efficiency and success which through this choice servant has been granted to us.

IV. That we anticipate with enthusiasm the prospect of his continuance in such service as his strength may allow, through which the resources of his wide experience may still be available to us.

For Dr. Beard, personally, we hope that coming days may be serene and confident, and that his path, according to the promise of the just, may be illumined by the light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

It was voted that the minutes and resolutions be adopted. The vote was taken by rising.

Continuing the informal report, the Committee recommended that the following persons be nominated for election by ballot at the business session in the afternoon: For Secretaries, Rev. James W. Cooper, Rev. Frank P. Woodbury, Rev. Charles J. Ryder; for Treasurer, Mr. H. W. Hubbard. The report was approved.

Whereas, After a period of service in the interest of the American Missionary Association, which began nearly fifty years ago, the Rev. Joseph E. Roy, D.D., has resigned his position as District Secretary for the Middle West, therefore Resolved, That this Association honors Dr. Roy as the oldest and one of the most faithful, most useful and most loved of the servants of the churches who have been connected with this Association. It was before the civil war that he became the representative in charge of our Church work in the West, and afterwards of that of the American Home Missionary Society, He then became Field Secretary in charge of the organization of our mission work in the South, and from that service was called to act as District Secretary of this Association in the West. In all these fields of labor, his energy, his wisdom, his high personal character have given to him the affection and admiration of our churches. He is known and honored by them all, and the personal impress of his sound judgment and piety is on our churches both west and south. We rejoice that his counsel and aid are not to be lost to this Association, and we beseech the Father of all races of men that a long evening of life may be given him above this horizon before his spirit shall rise into the eternal day.

FIFTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1903.

GENERAL SURVEY.

In a general survey successive years are much alike. There are schools, teachers and pupils; churches, pastors and parishioners; incidents and experiences. There is devoted consecration with the gracious fruitage of faith and works. There is the ever-present appeal for funds to meet calls from those who have the right to our sympathy and help. Christian love and duty, and love of country and of our fellowmen, appear and reappear with their arguments to our reason and our hearts.

No year, however, is like another in the particulars which make its history, and these cannot be repeated in the limits of an outlook which is general. There are no statistics which include them. No figures can show what its workers are doing nor tell the story of its influence. They cannot follow those who are quickened in mind and heart from ignominious contact with a life which is sin and shame to pure Christian lives and good Christian homes. There are no tables to indicate the moral fibre which is created year by year, nor the spiritual power which is its only guarantee. A missionary society which can wholly express itself in numbers has missed its calling. At the same time, a missionary society which cannot justify itself by figures has likewise missed its calling. We can take account of the things that are seen and we shall not magnify their importance unduly. To neglect the inventories of the visible fruitages of faith would imperil the interests of the kingdom of Christ.

In the first General Survey prepared by the Secretary who entered upon administrative duties in 1886 there were reported in the South 52 schools, of which 33 were common schools, 14 normal schools, and 5 chartered institutions looking toward a higher education.

In this year of 1903, the same Secretary reports in the South 64 schools, of which but 14 are common schools, 44 normal and graded, and 6 chartered institutions for higher learning. This is an increase of 30 normal and graded schools. There were then 218 instructors. There are now 476, an increase of 258. There were then 8,462 pupils, of whom 2,348 were in higher grades. There are now 14,429, of whom

5,580 are in the higher grades. That is, there are more than twice as many teachers and more than twice as many pupils in the higher grades than in 1886. At that time the teachers who had college degrees numbered 22; now there are 136 graduates of colleges.

Within this period there have been constructed 118 new edifices for educational purposes, the value of which is represented in part by an insurance of nearly half a million dollars. This growth, gradual, normal, and steady, has been almost without observation. These statistics indeed cannot represent the full achievements of faith, nor adequately measure the work and influences of these years, but they are in evidence that in no one of these years has the Association been marking time. The benevolences, their direction and care, have easily kept the American Missionary Association in the front rank of all the agencies for the salvation and amelioration of the peoples who have needed its help while amazing harvests have been reaped from heretofore neglected fields.

For the past year we have the following statistics of the

Our six institutions for higher learning are Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas, and Piedmont College, Georgia.

The collegiate departments in these institutions are relatively small. The intention is to encourage only those who have promise of exceptional usefulness, in view of mental ability and high moral purpose, to seek the higher lines of education. The year reports 317 in the college studies and 329 in the college preparatory courses. These institutions are the product of a most far-seeing wisdom, and are beyond question the most far-reaching in their usefulness in the entire system of schools under the care of the Association. The mere learning to read and write is not education, only the beginning of the way to it. What scholars and thinkers of a race are in themselves and in their work gives to the youth of the race standards for which to struggle and hope. They who rise above the average of their own race so as to stand with the influential of other races not only exalt themselves, but lift their race into recognition, and command for it a consideration which multitudes could never secure by lesser attainments. The final position of a people is determined by its higher representatives. President Tucker of Dartmouth College has been quoted as saying: "I believe with a growing conviction that the salvation of the Negro of this country lies with the exceptional men of that race." He is right. What Dr. Washington represents in his own personality does far more to uplift his race than all that is taught in the common schools of his State among his people. For every such an one ten thousand follow on with larger hopes, courage, ambition and purposes, and with the absolutely necessary racial self-respect. Institutions which afford opportunity for an education of all the faculties, and which stand for the higher possibilities of a race, well deserve the sympathy and help of Christian and patriotic generosity.

Our 44 normal and graded schools in the South register an attendance of 10,701 pupils and 307 teachers. It will be noticed that our common schools are now reduced in number to 14. Not unmindful of the ignorant masses for whom elementary education alone is possible, and of the imperative necessity that these should at least have so much as this, we are convinced that with our limitations larger results will be secured if we prepare worthy teachers for these schools under the care of the State and the public school system, than to scatter our energies where the States are assuming responsibility. In the long run we are thus reaching the masses of ignorant people far more effectively. Our schools to a great degree supply teachers for common schools under the direction of the State. The teachers for the most part carry with them the spirit and maxims of the Association schools, and become positive Christian forces also in the needy districts to which they go.

MOUNTAIN SCHOOLS.

Our schools among the white people of the mountains do not fail to quicken into intense interest the feelings of all teachers who are sent to them. The work of the Association would be great if it did no more than educate the youth of these neglected regions in the righteousness of thought and life, which will prepare them not only for good citizenship but for Christian service.

Some of our best ministers and missionaries are the products of our mountain schools.

Among the latest responsibilities assumed for the people of our own race in the South is the experiment of a theological school located in Atlanta, Georgia. Those who are engaged in the instruction there are greatly encouraged, and are hopeful of large results in the future.

Industrial and manual training all along the line of our educational system keeps pace with the departments of education. We recognize the necessity of this part of preparation for the duties of life. We are seeking to do this upon a superstructure of intellectual enlightenment, so that the work in itself shall be an educator. Our plantations and farms for agriculture, and for the raising and care of stock, our shops for work in wood, iron, and other handicrafts, our industrial buildings for girls for lessons in domestic science and nursing, where they may learn true homekeeping, are prominent factors in our theory and practice in education. In all the aim is Christian manhood and womanhood and preparation for useful service in an earnest Christian life.

We express our appreciation of the helpful sympathy which invariably comes to us in the communities in which our schools are located. Those who have informed themselves are often in cordial co-operation with us, some as trustees, others as school visitors. When in the South upon our official examination of schools and churches we find not a few who are glad to testify to the high character of both, and to the great service they are doing for the colored people. The brave endeavor of wise men in the South for the education and elevation of the Negro is most grateful to the Association which has had this service upon its heart and conscience for half a century. We know somewhat also of the moral courage which these must possess who are large enough to feel the needs and wrongs of a less fortunate race, and resolute enough to plead for their welfare in the face of a sentiment unfortunately too popular, assertive, and greatly dominant. The common assertion that the South understands the Negro question, and, if "let alone," will settle it for itself, proceeds upon the supposition that the South means only the dominant element there, and which makes little account of a South wiser but less numerous, while it dismisses from any consideration whatever a South of some eight or nine millions which nevertheless has human rights and whose concern for these and for themselves has a claim to be regarded. That South which seeks to evade the constitutional guarantees of equal justice as the right of every one, whatever may be his race or color, is not "letting alone" the law of the republic. That South which would not only disfranchise the Negro, but would also deprive him of the education needed for his advancement, not infrequently assures us that our work is a mistaken one and has accomplished nothing. This criticism, however, arises from the fact that so much has been accomplished as to somewhat disturb their accepted confidence in the inherent inferiority of the Negro. This question we do not argue, nor are we concerned with it. Meanwhile the words of a Negro, spoken from his college platform, are true, "that superiority of a race or an individual which has for its foundation the ignorance of others, and which measures itself by their weakness, is the most insignificant kind of superiority."

As a missionary society born out of Christian zeal for righteousness of the public conscience in its application to the oppressed, and working for the millions redeemed from slavery, it would be for us a guilty silence not to lift our voices in sympathy with these oppressed people in their sore trials, and not to protest against the spirit and purpose which proposes to reduce them to the perpetual injustice of a subject state, and to make their freedom a bitter mockery. The trying conditions which environ our work and the people for whose welfare we stand, call for a renewed consecration on the part of those whose fidelity has made our past history great in its accomplishments.

EDUCATIONAL.

We began our school work in Santurce, a suburb of San Juan, in 1899, and at Lares, which is nearly in the center of the island in the mountain district. These schools have greatly prospered, and have not only won the confidence and approval of the communities in which they are located, but have received high commendation from the Commissioner of Public Schools appointed by the United States Government. In both schools there is an urgent demand for more facilities of buildings and school appointments. Many pupils who are eager to acquire the education afforded by our schools cannot be received for lack of room. The principal of our school at Santurce writes us, "Almost daily the question is asked, When do you expect to build?" The principal adds, "We have many tourists from all parts of the States who are much impressed with the importance of our work and of its growing necessities." At Lares there is equal urgency. The only limitations to the usefulness of these missionary schools are in the insufficiency of our accommodations. Many of the pupils have already entered upon consistent Christian lives, and several have gone out to teach their less fortunate people.

CHURCH WORK.

Our church work in Porto Rico is unchanged as to church centers, although the number of preaching out-stations has considerably increased. The church at Fajardo is in a very prosperous condition. Several committees have been formed in the church for various purposes, and they are all working well. The attendance is increasing. Although the members are all poor, they are beginning to help themselves, and to relieve their own poor and sick. For nearly four years our missionary there has preached in narrow and inadequate quarters in a dwelling house. Our missionary at Humacao has not only continued to work in the city, but has carried on extensive work through the surrounding regions.

By common consent in the conference between the four co-operating denominations, we occupy the eastern end of the island, our main points there being Fajardo and Humacao. In addition to these we have at Lares church work begun before these conferences had taken place. It is to be hoped that we may have forces to occupy Luquillo and Caguas before long. At the former place there is not even a Catholic church, and it is surrounded by several smaller places which need and welcome the gospel. At Luquillo eighty persons have already subscribed their names as desiring to be admitted into church membership. Caguas is becoming a railroad center of increasing importance. At Las Cabezas, one hundred and sixty-eight have enrolled their names for church membership, and we hope soon to erect a missionary building in which to carry on the work. The people of Las Cabezas are of pure Porto Rican blood. Naturally intelligent and clear-witted, they are a vigorous race of people. While they are evidently sincere and earnest, they are wholly ignorant of the simplest Bible truths, and need a great deal of patience and faithful teaching.

CHURCH WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Number of churches	232
Ministers and missionaries	142
Church members	12,549
Total additions	1,222
Added on profession	1,018
Benevolent contributions	$3,678.35
Raised for church purposes	38,369.32

It is often supposed that our Southern church work is mainly with our schools. A generation ago this was the case. Nearly two-thirds of our churches were attached to schools; but at the present time more than three-quarters of our churches are in places where we have no school work. During the last ten years more than a hundred churches have been planted in such places, and the number will undoubtedly increase. Instead of two or three hundred Southern churches, we ought soon to have double our present number.

During the winter Rev. James Wharton of England, who for more than twenty years has carried on evangelizing services among our Southern churches, spent four months in the same service. This year he visited many churches with which he had previously labored and took careful account as to the results of the labor of former years, finding a very large number of those who had been converted still in active and faithful association with their churches.

The assassination of Rev. L. A. Planving of Louisiana, removes from our service one of our most cherished workers. Mr. Planving's main missionary service in connection with the Association has been as a pastor. His newly-begun school work was being pressed forward with his usual enthusiasm when a career of great promise was arrested by the bullet of the assassin.

The most noteworthy event of the year has been the great Atlanta Convention of Congregational Workers in the South among the colored people. This convention was composed almost entirely of our Southern church workers. Delegations were present not only from Georgia, where the convention was held, and the Carolinas, but also from Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. The attendance from Louisiana was notably large. No such gathering was ever before held. The subjects discussed covered the whole range of family, church, school, social and public responsibilities and duties. Of the papers and addresses, more than thirty were contributed by the colored pastors and delegates. They were clear, intelligent and discriminating discussions of the various topics they dealt with; and the declaration of the convention (which has since been issued) is a document of much dignity and weight. The convention sermon was given by Vice-President Cooper, and the closing discourse by Dr. Bradford, Moderator of the National Council.

MOUNTAIN CHURCHES.

Our white churches in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, North Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana, have carried their work forward during the year with great earnestness. We have not been able to equip them adequately, single pastors being obliged to distribute their work among several different churches, and often over quite large preaching circuits. They have done their utmost. As students go out from our schools, they carry with them the principles and polity of free churches, and often express the desire to have preachers sent who shall preach the gospel in its purity, rightly emphasizing its ethical side, and gathering from among the people constituencies desiring to support work of this character. There can be no doubt that there are large numbers of white people in the South who would welcome and favor the introduction of free churches, grounded on the principles for which our churches stand. Often such movements tend to culminate in organizing in the South, as in the West, union churches; and they stand always for those essential principles of freedom and fellowship which characterize our polity.

We cannot better summarize the intent and results of our Indian work than in the following statement from a missionary:

"During the last thirty years there have been great changes in the condition of all the Indians of the Northwest. And Christianity has been the only power that has transformed barbarism into the beginnings of civilization. It is, above all, the influence of Christian missions and thoroughly Christian education that has changed the whole Sioux Indian people in their ideals of life from roving savages and pauper dependents to a willing attitude toward self-help and creative industry."

Our school work at Santee includes both academic and manual training. The purpose is to create intelligent and patient workers. The manual education is chiefly for the development of mind and character, although incidentally valuable education is given in blacksmithing, carpentering, and agricultural work. Santee does not leave its former students neglected. With them and with others desirous of self-improvement, large correspondence work is carried on, and this is further supplemented by educational lecture tours throughout the reservations. Santee, also, is at the head of the Bible correspondence institute, in which careful training is given in the Scriptures. This Indian correspondence school does its work throughout Nebraska, the Dakotas, Minnesota and Montana. It has a membership of over a hundred, and is constantly increasing. Santee is also the center of the publication work which has been of so much service throughout the Indian reservations of the Northwest.

The work in the Oahe school has gone on prosperously through the winter. Owing to the fuel famine, close economy had to be practiced in the building. The health of the pupils has been fairly good throughout the year. There is a great need of a better equipment for a laundry, which has at present no drainage and no adequate conveniences for work in freezing weather.

Work in the Cheyenne and Standing Rock River reservations has been prosecuted with energy, and the progress of the former years has been maintained. The work at Grand River has been carried forward through the churches, and particularly through the government school located there. The government school regulations there, as everywhere, admit of co-operative mission work; and teachers themselves are free to attend to the moral and religious improvement of their pupils. The Fort Yates district includes the largest Indian church throughout our work. It has had the privilege of welcoming the great fall religious gathering of more than 2,000 Indians. Although the weather was very adverse, with its mingled rain and hail and snow, the meeting was a successful one

Both the out-station mission work and the educational work at Fort Berthold are continued with the same self-denial and economy as previously, and with excellent results.

In Montana the Crow Indians are now receiving grants in severalty, and there is prospect of much more rapid progress both in civilization and religion than under the former system of things. Our Skokomish missionary in the far Northwest continues to care for his different churches, and makes his journeys, covering annually thousands of miles, by land and water, in order to meet the needs of his scattered people.

One of our most experienced Indian missionaries gives it as his judgment that the condition of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in Oklahoma is quite similar to that of the wild Dakotas many years ago. Christianity has not yet taken a deep hold upon these Indians; but a most interesting work is carried on with them. While the field is a difficult one, the opportunity afforded by the two great Indian schools is a fine one for Christian work. The agent in charge and his wife have sustained the most cordial and helpful relations to our missionaries, and are both members of our church. The tide of white population coming into that region tends to overwhelm the Indians, and their only hope for the future is the renewed vigor and character-power coming from Christianity.

ALASKAN MISSION.

Our Alaskan mission has met with a serious disaster this year in the outbreak of a fire in the missionary's home, which consumed nearly all the furniture and most of the clothing, etc., of the family. It was arrested by the promptitude and courage of our Eskimo assistant. It has seriously increased the expenditures of our missionary.

The reindeer herd has grown to large proportions, and occupies grounds at a distance of from 10 to 30 miles from the mission, according as the food can be found. The herders are Eskimos, and every effort is made toward training them into independency. More than half the herd is now in the possession and ownership of the Eskimos themselves; the remainder is held in trust by the mission while the training of the people goes on.

The population at the Cape is fluctuating, owing to the demands for finding a livelihood up and down the coast. During certain seasons many of the children even have to be out fishing, and the women share in that work. The men hunt for seals, walruses and whales.

Our missionary divides the time between the main mission station and the reindeer camps. He speaks of the promising indications of the natives who are being trained to care for the reindeer. They are known to all white men visiting the country as the best of the natives. As Christians, they live good lives, and turn their backs upon the old evil ways of living. Our missionary reports that the attendance at the Sunday school and prayer meeting services varies as it does in the day school, though not in so marked a degree. When the natives are hunting, the boats are often away for weeks at a time, and there are periods when almost every man is absent from the village. At the prayer meeting previous to our missionary's last report there were 125 persons. The advance of civilization to within 100 miles has awakened the natives to their need of cleaner and more sanitary ways of living. It is difficult to secure good results in the half-underground dugouts that they live in, particularly during the winter, when they have so little chance of washing their clothing. It is found very hard to get water in the winter. The present supply is brought in large cans on sledges for a distance of nearly two miles. Every effort is being made to introduce the use of the English language. It is evident from the progress northward of the whites that this is to be the language of the future. While the necessary expenditures of the past year have been much in excess of the support of the mission, it is now hoped that a good share of the expense can be met by the sale of reindeer. No more interesting development of the power of Christianity to elevate and inspire the most degraded of human beings can be found than the story of our Alaskan mission among the Eskimos.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE MISSIONS.

STATISTICS.

Number of missions	20
Whole number of workers, (white, 30; Chinese and Japanese, 18)	48
Number of pupils in schools	1,283
Number giving evidence of having been converted	162

The Chinese population of the continental United States is diminishing. It is thirty thousand less than ten years ago. There are comparatively few newcomers; and many of those who remain are too old to respond to missionary endeavor. Still, the opportunity for mission work among Chinese families is increasing. While the number of Chinese men is less, the number of families is greater. There are said to be 800 families in the single city of San Francisco.

The Japanese population is rapidly increasing. It rose from two thousand in 1890 to twenty-four thousand in 1900; and late estimates denote a very large increase upon the latter number. Most of the coming Japanese are young men, open-minded and anxious to learn. They are practically in the same condition as were the Chinese thirty years ago. In Los Angeles we have two successful Japanese missions, one of them being among the very largest in California. Our superintendent reports several points: Riverside, San Bernardino, Santa Cruz, Santa Barbara and Marysville, where we can enter upon Japanese work with comparatively little expense. In each of these fields we have a mission house, and one teacher can do the teaching for both peoples. A great need is felt for Japanese headquarters in San Francisco. It should be located in the center of the Japanese population, and might become the largest Japanese mission school in the State. An earnest demand reaches us for a larger provision in behalf of the rapidly increasing Japanese mission work already inaugurated.

FINANCIAL.

The receipts for current work are as follows:

Donations	$180,841.70
Legacies for Current Work	87,043.76
Income	6,553.57
Income from Talladega College Funds	4,000.00
Tuition	53,162.86
Slater Fund	5,000.00
Total		$336,601.89
Which, with balance in hand October 1st, of		1,251.84
Makes a total of		$337,853.73
The expenditures have been		357,267.73
Making a debt balance on the year of		$19,414.00

It is gratifying to note that the donations are $11,044.89 more than last year. Had the full amount of 20 per cent. increase recommended by the last annual meeting been received, we should have closed the year free of debt.

The expenditures for the year were $11,079.67 less than last year. This has been secured by extreme economies and the denial of urgent work as important as any that is now being maintained by the Association. The present work calls for enlarged support.

With the present Reserve Legacy Plan we may expect

From Legacies annually about	$100,000.00
The estimate from Tuition is	55,000.00
From Income	10,000.00
From Slater Fund	5,000.00
There will be needed in donations from churches and individuals, in order to adequately carry on the work	230,000.00
Making a total estimate for the year of	$400,000.00

This calls for an increase from Churches, Sunday Schools, Women's Missionary Societies, Young People's Societies and Individuals of $50,000.00, an increase in donations of about 28 per cent. over past year.

The two hundred and thirty thousand dollars from donations seems a moderate sum when the needs and the opportunities are so great.

RESERVE LEGACY ACCOUNT.

The balance on Oct. 1st, 1902, was	$73,907.17
Appropriated and used in 1902-03	49.271.45
Balance appropriated for 1903-04	$24,635.72
To this has been added from legacies received this year	38,592.77
Making total appropriation for 1903-04	$63,228.49
There has been appropriated from legacies received this year for 1904-05	38,592.77
And the total for 1903-04 and 1904-05 is	$101,821.26

The average receipts from legacies in periods of ten years are about $100,000.00 a year, and your Committee believes that under the present Reserve Legacy Plan about $100,000.00 a year will be available for current work from year to year. The advantages of this Reserve Legacy Plan have been explained by Lucien C. Warner, LL. D., Chairman of our Finance Committee, in an article which was printed in The American Missionary for February, 1903, and in a pamphlet which has been widely circulated, and which can be furnished to any person desiring further information.

DANIEL HAND INCOME ACCOUNT.

(For the Education of Colored People in the South.)

The income for the year is	$66,139.77
Which, with the balance in hand at the beginning of the year of	3,477.14
Makes a total of	$69,616.91
There has been expended	63,247.72
Balance on hand and appropriated	$6,369.19

The expenditures are given in detail in a separate report, and the work has been fruitful in blessing to thousands who would not otherwise have had educational advantages.

The Association has received and remitted $4,403.25 income to institutions and mission work not now under its care, but for which it holds funds the income of which is to be annually expended.

The Association has also received as endowment fund the sum of $150.00, the income of which is to be expended for the education of the colored people, and the executors of the estate of Mrs. Julia E. Brick have paid into the treasury the sum of $30,000.00 for the Joseph K. Brick Agricultural, Industrial and Normal School, near Enfield, N. C.

The total amount received for current work and for endowment is $433,294.91.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

This department has been the channel for communication with Women's State Organizations and a great number of local missionary societies, furnishing liberally varied missionary information through literature and field letters. There has been an increase in contributions, the amount received during the year being $27,877.03, an increase of about eight and a half per cent. over contributions of the preceding year. Co-operation of Women's Societies has been shown in many other ways also, in providing supplies for dormitories, equipment for sewing schools and gifts for the Christmas time.

FIELD OF SUPPORT.

There has seldom been a year in the recent history of the Association when the regular and occasional publications have been so much in demand. Our leaflets are not sent out carelessly, but almost always in response to requests. In this way during the year there have been distributed the following surprising amount of leaflets:

General	98,500
Mountain	17,500
Negro	41,500
Indian	16,000
Alaska	5,000
Porto Rico	24,000
Chinese	1,500
Christian Endeavor	6,000

We rejoice in this evidence of increasing interest in the work of the Association and the manifestation of a desire on the part of those interested to gain accurate and comprehensive information.

Attention has especially been directed to the Negro problem in its various phases. The economic, intellectual and moral development of the Negro has been a subject of discussion and study in many of the churches, mission circles and Endeavor societies, as well as in various literary and social clubs. We have been glad to furnish literature relating directly to these important questions. The value of the publications of this Association as they bear upon these great national problems and furnish expert testimony concerning them cannot easily be overestimated.

Special Study Leaflets, presenting the different peoples in our field of mission work, have been found valuable to various mission classes.

The financial results of the year's work are not what we hoped. There has been an increase in donations, indicating the continued interest in the work, which gives evidence that the Association still holds its large place in the sympathy and support of the churches. At New London last year a cordial and unanimous vote was taken by the delegates and representatives of the churches, urging that a strong effort be made by the pastor of each church to increase the gifts to the Association during the year at least twenty per cent. This vote has not been realized in the returns from the churches. We have sought constantly to keep this action before our constituents, as it was the calm and deliberate judgment of the churches as they came in touch with the work and estimated its importance in view of the facts presented at the annual gathering. It seems but a reasonable appeal, and certainly the work in this vast field abundantly demands such increase of support. Our chartered institutions also demand enlarged endowment.

We appreciate the increased income which has reached our treasury during the closing year from donations. Five years ago the administration in the office was readjusted and the Department, or Field of Support, was created, and one of the secretaries was placed in correspondence and administrative responsibility for this department. The total income from living donors the previous year, 1898, was $150,660. Our financial report this year shows an income from the same source of $180,841. This is an increase of twenty per cent. in gifts from donations during this period, and seems amply to justify the method of administration. We shall press during the current year, upon which we enter with confident hope and expectation, for at least two hundred thousand dollars in donations from the friends of this great work.

It is the earnest hope that during the year upon which we now enter, churches and pastors will appreciate the imperative need of increasing their collections so as to meet the necessities of this work.

We have noted with pleasure the increased interest on the part of individual contributors. In several instances appeals have been made through the magazine or by personal letter in behalf of some special form of work. Cordial response has often been made to these appeals, and special necessities have been met that greatly reinforced the work. We believe that the current income which reaches our treasury from church collections and other like sources should meet the current expenses in the administration of these mission fields. When enlargement in plant, either in the addition of new buildings, or any considerable increase in the development of the work becomes necessary, it is our policy to appeal directly for this increase, trusting that friends who see the importance of this work will respond, so that there need neither be a debt on the treasury at the end of the year, nor a loss in the efficiency of the work. This wholesome financial policy seems the wisest and best, and furnishes friends interested in the enlargement and maintenance of the work opportunity for the material expression of their sympathy and interest.

We would commend the election of a special representative by each of the local conferences with whom our secretary may come into correspondence, and who shall be commissioned by the churches to gather and present at the various meetings of the conference the latest information concerning the work of the Association. Many conferences have already adopted this plan. Its success proves its utility. Its uniform adoption by the different conferences would greatly increase its value. The difficulty we find is to get information before the churches in such direct and complete form as to be of greatest value to them. A local pastor, elected by the conference, and residing within its territory, whose duty and privilege it is to keep himself informed as to the progress of the work of the Association, becomes thus a valuable bureau of information to other pastors, and is easily and always within their reach.

The increasing interest of the young people in the work of the Association, which is so largely for young people and children, is a hopeful sign of the times. We have commissioned one of our secretaries to act with the secretaries of the other societies in the Young People's Movement. Much has been done through the year which is closing in the development of this work. Conventions and institutes have been held in which addresses or instruction have been given by representatives from the various societies. Especially in New England have these gatherings been of value. A concerted plan to be carried on through the Young People's Movement provides for every household a mite box or mission bank, in which a Special Christmas Offering will be gathered for the missionary work represented by our Congregational churches. We trust that this will not only add materially to the missionary income, but will also arouse sympathetic interest on the part of the young people in the progress of the Kingdom of God in these various mission fields. We are glad to join in this inter-society movement in behalf of the progress of our mission work as a whole.

We report a change in the District Secretaryship for the Western District. Dr. J. E. Roy, after years of efficient service as Field Superintendent and District Secretary, resigned his position in the Chicago office. Your Committee, with great regret, accepted his resignation, asking him to continue in connection with the office as Secretary Emeritus. He is still busily engaged in work for the Association, having conducted important campaigns through New York State during the autumn.

Rev. W. L. Tenney, D. D., was called from the pastorate at North Adams, Mass., to become District Secretary in the Western District. Dr. Tenney had been a teacher in Straight University, and was well acquainted with the work. He had occupied important pastorates East and West, and was well known among the churches. He has entered upon the duties of his Secretaryship with vigor and devotion, and your Committee especially appreciates the cordial reception given him as the representative of the Association among the churches.

We close the fifty-seventh year of the life of the American Missionary Association with grateful acknowledgment to pastors and other friends for their cordial and generous support. We confidently believe that this work among the needy races in our own land has never had a deeper or more sympathetic hold upon the Christian citizenship than it has to-day. We believe also that those who are interested in it are thoroughly convinced that the proper method of solving these intricate and difficult race problems is through the economic, intellectual, moral and religious development of the people. The work of the Association provides the school, the church, the shop, the farm, and better than all, the Christian home, through which and in which there are being realized the best and most abiding evidences of the progress of these peoples.

Reports of Committees.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SOUTHERN EDUCATIONAL WORK.

PRES. CHARLES F. THWING, D.D., LL.D., CHAIRMAN.

The question is not whether the Negro race is more or less civilized than the Anglo-Saxon. The Negro race is less civilized than the Anglo-Saxon; but that is not of present concern. The question is not whether certain individual black men are superior or inferior to certain white men. The question is not whether the best white men are better than the best black men, or whether the worst black men are worse than the worst white men. The question is not which race in its origin and early conditions was superior. The question is not whether the Negro shall belong to the subject class. The question is not whether the Negro shall live in America, for here he is to live. He refuses to emigrate; he declines to die.

The question is whether the Negro shall be regarded as a man. The question is whether he belongs to the human race. If he be a man, all the rights which belong to a man should be given him to enjoy; if he be a man, all the duties which belong to a man should be given to him to do. If he be a man, therefore, the question goes back to the city of Philadelphia, "the City of Brotherly Love," and to the Declaration of Independence: "All men are created free and equal, and have a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." If he be a man, the question goes back to Mt. Sinai—to the "Ten Commandments." If he be a man the question belongs to the four gospels, and to the great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self."

Therefore, the question is a question not of the South, not of the North, nor of the United States nor of Africa. It is a question of humanity, of the perfectibility of man, of the sufficiency of God to save man, of the capacity of man to be saved. Therefore the question is a question of and for the race; it is also a question of and for the individual. In the growth of the collective principle in human society we are not to forget that the first unit is the individual himself. The individual is to adjust himself to other individuals; he is to be worthy to receive benefits from them; he is to be worthy to confer benefits upon them. He is to make himself the finest type of the man—the body a worthy condition for and tool of the soul; the intellect clear and large to think; the heart warm and tender to love; the conscience keen to approval and remorse in ethical conduct and misconduct; the will mighty to choose the right and mighty to refuse evil. He is to make himself the best neighbor; he is to saw wood and draw water, if that be the best he can do; he is to be porter and waiter, if that be the best he can do; he is to be merchant and carpenter, if that be the best he can do; he is to teach school, preach sermons, plead cases, practice medicine, write editorials or books, if that be his best. He is to be the best; he is to do the best. Such a duty, such a privilege, belongs to the Negro as a man.

In making himself the best character, in making himself the best doer, education is for man the primary force. Education is the only force which the state formally uses for its security and perpetuity, for education represents the love of the family, the value of the infinite, which is the essence of religion, the book and the whole power of personality. Education is comprehensive, vital, vitalizing.

At this point emerges the inquiry about the kind of education to be used in securing these great results. The answer is as clear as are the principles whence is derived the answer. The answer is, all kinds of education. Shall the hand say to the foot, "I have no need of thee"? The kind is determined by the capacity of the individual, by the environment of the individual, and by the career the individual is to pursue. It will, therefore, be a manual education for some. It is to be a manual education for most men, whatever their color. The education will also be an intellectual education for some, for the race lacks leadership—leadership which will be as wise as it is courageous. It will also be a moral education, for humanity is still in its wolfish, lionish, tigerish stage of lust, avariciousness and revenge. All pride, therefore, in Tuskegee's shops, and all honor to Booker Washington. All pride, therefore, in Fisk's academic halls, and all honor to the memory of Cravath.

Education works by growth, like nature. It represents not the French Revolution, swift destruction, rapid overturnings, reforms of the guillotine. It represents the English Revolution, reflections, discussions, constitutions, laws. Therefore education demands time, not as an agent, but as a condition.

ducation, too, of all sorts, is the broadest method of lifting a race. The question is a sectarian question, but it is more; it is a religious question, but it is more; it is a social question, but it is yet more—it is the human question; therefore the broadest of human methods should be used in its solution.

Moreover, education makes its primary appeal to the reason. It is remote from passion. It has no kinship with prejudice. Its light is the white light of truth. Such is the only condition for the discussion of the decision of great questions. War does not reason: it kills. Passion does not reason: it strikes. Neither the rifle nor the fist nor the torch can settle the question. No question of the Anglo-Saxon world is settled until it is settled right. When settled right it is settled forever. Truth is the guide to the right, and education is at once the daughter and mother of truth. Therefore this Association of glorious history is to continue in the work so nobly done, only with larger resources and greater influence. As Peter said, "add to your faith," so say we; add to your weekly offerings, add to your yearly offerings, and multiply your endowments manifold

We desire to commend the statesmanship of the report. The comprehension of the problems considered is large; the interpretations are sane, lucid, judicial. There is no sense of ill-considered haste in the doing of duties laid on the Association. The atmosphere in which the report is written is, like the work, instinctive with a sense of large relationships. The annual statement represents the work of statesmen dealing worthily with the most serious business of the state or society. It represents Congregationalism so dealing with great problems that the method is more than ecclesiastical, becoming human, and the results following are humane. The work itself enlarges, and its enlargement is conditioned only by the resources offered for its support. Increased support is specially demanded for the new work undertaken in Porto Rico, as well as for all the work, new and old, in the South.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SOUTHERN CHURCH WORK.

PROF. W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The Church work in the South was an inevitable outgrowth of the educational work of the Association. But it has gained in power to such an extent that it is now being pushed forward for its own sake and with increasing success. The number of churches, for several years, has been almost stationary, but we ought to expect a rapid advance henceforward. For the need is great, the response of the people to Congregational methods and ideas is ready, and the supporters of the A. M. A. must be and will be aroused to put more strength into this task of Christ redemption of the Negro race through the organized Church.

The report of the Rev. James Wharton, of England, on the stability of converts gained through evangelism in former years is most lish Japanese headquarters in San Francisco, which should be the incorporation of the best ideals of this Association, and to do it at this strategic moment, would be a deed of worldwide significance and would certainly project the best intellectual and spiritual forces in the world to-day far down into the future, and would have an influence clear beyond our power to estimate in the working out of the great Eastern question.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PORTO RICO.

REV. OLIVER HUCKEL, CHAIRMAN.

Porto Rico presents one of the newest and most fascinating fields and one of the most strategic opportunities now open to the Congregational churches. It is a Latin community which welcomes the American spirit. The American method in commerce is rapidly being adopted; the American school system is being universally introduced; the transforming power of the best American church life must also be given to Porto Rico.

Four great denominations are now at work there in a fine spirit of Christian comity—the Congregationalists, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Baptists. Other Christian communions in smaller ways are aiding in the work. But the work that we Congregationalists are doing is second to none in its broad plans, its large scope and its superb opportunity. Our educational work began first. Our schools at Santurce and Lares are fine institutions under an efficient and enthusiastic corps of teachers. They are not only supplementing the American government's public school system, which so far has not been able to provide more than one-quarter of the school facilities needed, but they are also training schools to produce native teachers of high quality and character. And, best of all, they are centers for a wholesome Christian influence and example on the lives of the pupils and in the homes which they represent. Should the government in coming years be able to supply all the public school facilities needed, the future of our Congregational schools there would still be assured for the training of Christian teachers. The scope of the schools would be advanced with the needs of the times. The educational work is being strongly supplemented by evangelistic work. The evangelism must not be allowed to spend itself in mere preaching. More churches and Sunday-schools must be organized, however small, whenever opportunity offers. Several churches may be grouped in a circuit under one pastor. For it is the regular pastoral care and the faithful Sunday-school work for the children that is to count largely in the spiritual regeneration of Porto Rico.

is remote from passion. It has no kinship with prejudice. Its light is the white light of truth. Such is the only condition for the discussion of the decision of great questions. War does not reason: it kills. Passion does not reason: it strikes. Neither the rifle nor the fist nor the torch can settle the question. No question of the Anglo-Saxon world is settled until it is settled right. When settled right it is settled forever. Truth is the guide to the right, and education is at once the daughter and mother of truth. Therefore this Association of glorious history is to continue in the work so nobly done, only with larger resources and greater influence. As Peter said, "add to your faith," so say we; add to your weekly offerings, add to your yearly offerings, and multiply your endowments manifold

We desire to commend the statesmanship of the report. The comprehension of the problems considered is large; the interpretations are sane, lucid, judicial. There is no sense of ill-considered haste in the doing of duties laid on the Association. The atmosphere in which the report is written is, like the work, instinctive with a sense of large relationships. The annual statement represents the work of statesmen dealing worthily with the most serious business of the state or society. It represents Congregationalism so dealing with great problems that the method is more than ecclesiastical, becoming human, and the results following are humane. The work itself enlarges, and its enlargement is conditioned only by the resources offered for its support. Increased support is specially demanded for the new work undertaken in Porto Rico, as well as for all the work, new and old, in the South.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SOUTHERN CHURCH WORK.

PROF. W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The Church work in the South was an inevitable outgrowth of the educational work of the Association. But it has gained in power to such an extent that it is now being pushed forward for its own sake and with increasing success. The number of churches, for several years, has been almost stationary, but we ought to expect a rapid advance henceforward. For the need is great, the response of the people to Congregational methods and ideas is ready, and the supporters of the A. M. A. must be and will be aroused to put more strength into this task of Christ redemption of the Negro race through the organized Church.

The report of the Rev. James Wharton, of England, on the stability of converts gained through evangelism in former years is most lish Japanese headquarters in San Francisco, which should be the incorporation of the best ideals of this Association, and to do it at this strategic moment, would be a deed of worldwide significance and would certainly project the best intellectual and spiritual forces in the world to-day far down into the future, and would have an influence clear beyond our power to estimate in the working out of the great Eastern question.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PORTO RICO.

REV. OLIVER HUCKEL, CHAIRMAN.

Porto Rico presents one of the newest and most fascinating fields and one of the most strategic opportunities now open to the Congregational churches. It is a Latin community which welcomes the American spirit. The American method in commerce is rapidly being adopted; the American school system is being universally introduced; the transforming power of the best American church life must also be given to Porto Rico.

Four great denominations are now at work there in a fine spirit of Christian comity—the Congregationalists, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Baptists. Other Christian communions in smaller ways are aiding in the work. But the work that we Congregationalists are doing is second to none in its broad plans, its large scope and its superb opportunity. Our educational work began first. Our schools at Santurce and Lares are fine institutions under an efficient and enthusiastic corps of teachers. They are not only supplementing the American government's public school system, which so far has not been able to provide more than one-quarter of the school facilities needed, but they are also training schools to produce native teachers of high quality and character. And, best of all, they are centers for a wholesome Christian influence and example on the lives of the pupils and in the homes which they represent. Should the government in coming years be able to supply all the public school facilities needed, the future of our Congregational schools there would still be assured for the training of Christian teachers. The scope of the schools would be advanced with the needs of the times. The educational work is being strongly supplemented by evangelistic work. The evangelism must not be allowed to spend itself in mere preaching. More churches and Sunday-schools must be organized, however small, whenever opportunity offers. Several churches may be grouped in a circuit under one pastor. For it is the regular pastoral care and the faithful Sunday-school work for the children that is to count largely in the spiritual regeneration of Porto Rico.

We recommend, therefore, the vigorous prosecution of both our educational and evangelistic work in Porto Rico, but an increased emphasis on the work of planting churches and organizing Sunday-schools. Let the number of our missionaries be doubled or trebled, and let them be instructed and encouraged to organize Congregational churches and Sunday-schools wherever their preaching stations show encouragement and promise. Let them also be directed to attack centers of population—the large cities and the larger towns—and not be side-tracked in smaller places. We also recommend to all our home churches an increase of contributions to the Association, mentioning, if they so desire, this object, that the Association may have additional means to send more workers qualified in Spanish, in evangelistic spirit, and in the gifts of pastoral care. We commend to young men in our seminaries and to young men in our ministry the demands of this work in Porto Rico, and the wonderful opportunity that God has there opened for consecrated service and large usefulness.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

JOSEPH E. BROWN, CHAIRMAN.

After having ascertained that the general methods of book-keeping and accounting, which have been brought about through the care and intelligence of your treasurer, are still in operation whereby one may see almost at a glance the general condition of the financial interests of the Association, its attention was more particularly directed to an examination of the present condition of the invested funds of the Association, deeming it important, in these times of financial unrest and distrust, to ascertain, if possible, the true condition of these funds and other properties.

The large investments in school buildings and churches for the uses of the society, appear to have been carefully guarded, and the condition of the properties reported as well maintained; and all of it is properly covered by insurance against loss by fire. The buildings are maintained solely for the uses of the Association, and not for purposes of income, and they are the permanent and beneficent product of the benevolence of the public. They are all free and clear of any incumbrance. And, further, no funds from any endowment bequest have been applied to or are invested in these buildings.

Coming then to the important item of our endowment funds, we find that they are invested, for the most part:

1st. In mortgage loans upon improved real estate, almost all of which are located in the City of New York. The value of these properties, in every case, was certified to by expert real estate valuers,

Mrs. Kate Lord Wheeler, wife of Rev. W. E. Wheeler, Principal of Pleasant Hill Academy, Pleasant Hill, Tenn., died at Howard Springs, Tenn., July 28, 1903. Mrs. Wheeler was born in Williamsfield, Ohio, and early in life developed unusual gifts in singing. When only a girl she announced it as her purpose to be "a singing missionary." To this idea she turned her thought and directed her studies. She graduated from Olivet College, and afterward studied in the Oberlin Conservatory of Music. She had taught in different schools of the American Missionary Association, and everywhere carried out her original idea of singing the gospel into the hearts of the people. She was married to Rev. W. E. Wheeler in 1879, and they together gave their lives to religious and educational work. For some time her health had been failing, but she continued in active service until last November. She was buried at Pleasant Hill, where for so long thousands have felt the helpful influence of her devoted life.

Laforest A. Planving, Principal of the Pointe Coupee Industrial and High School, was shot and instantly killed near his home at Oscar, La., on the night of August 30th. There is no doubt that this was an unprovoked and cruel murder. Mr. Planving was a young colored man of exceptional manliness and devotion. He established the school of which he was principal, making it largely self-supporting from the very first. The American Missionary Association aided him by a yearly appropriation, and was in constant correspondence with him, counseling and directing him in his work. He had been held in highest esteem by both white and colored citizens who knew him in Louisiana. His record at Straight University, from which institution he graduated, was of the best. The teachers in that institution, including President Atwood, Dr. Tenney and Prof. Barber, the latter now of Mount Holyoke College, bear testimony to his high character, his industry and fidelity as a student. When he established the school he consulted freely with the white planters in the neighborhood of Oscar and received their hearty approval of his work. He especially rejoiced in the sympathy which he had from these leading citizens. He had appeared on the platform of the American Missionary Association and won the hearts of those who heard him with his simple, straightforward story of the work he was seeking to do and his high hopes for his people. That such a man should be shot down in such a work is a most shameful comment on American civilization and upon the administration of law and the defence of worthy citizens in Louisiana.

We recommend, therefore, the vigorous prosecution of both our educational and evangelistic work in Porto Rico, but an increased emphasis on the work of planting churches and organizing Sunday-schools. Let the number of our missionaries be doubled or trebled, and let them be instructed and encouraged to organize Congregational churches and Sunday-schools wherever their preaching stations show encouragement and promise. Rev. George C. Rowe died suddenly at Charleston, S. C., October 3d. He was born at Litchfield, Conn., May 1, 1853. He went South about thirty years ago and first had charge of the printing department of Hampton Institute. He had been in the service of the American Missionary Association for more than twenty years. He became pastor of the Plymouth Church, Charleston, in 1885, where he served until 1897, when he resigned and took charge of the Battery Mission, Charleston. He organized the Battery Church at this mission where he served as pastor until the time of his death. He was editor of the Charleston Inquirer, a weekly newspaper, for twelve years, and a leading writer of the Negro Race in the South.

dustrial training in the kitchen and at the work-bench, the class work and meetings of every description for the physical, mental, social and spiritual development of the people. But that does not reveal, nor is it possible to reveal, the hand-to-hand, personal work of missionaries with individuals, the work that brings one and another and another into the ranks of Christian usefulness and often of leadership. It was heart-burden and prayer, personal interest, friendly watchfulness over the individual, on the part of a missionary among the Indians, that brought to his position of usefulness a Wakutemani; among the Eskimo, that brought out an Ad-loo-at. Among the Mountaineers it is this same personal work with individual pupils that brings the satisfactory results. A faithful teacher to the Negroes led a little black boy to Christ, encouraged and counseled him for years, put him in the way of college education, then followed him through his theological course. Now for many years he has been an able preacher to one of the leading colored churches South. This same discerning teacher selected one of her Sunday-school boys, bought his time of his father, put him into the day-school, later sent him to college and aided in his support. She followed him ever with letters of sympathy and hope for a successful career. This year the young man enters the service of the American Missionary Association as a preacher of the Gospel, one of the leaders of his race. Many A. M. A. teachers aid students from their own slender missionary salaries. Trace the influences in the lives of the most promising men and women of the colored race and you will find conspicuous, throughout, the personal care and counsel of some missionary teacher. Many hundreds of colored girls have thus received from childhood up personal interest and love that would not let them go, but watched, sympathized, admonished, guided year after year. These are the girls who, grown to worthy womanhood, are making good homes, filling useful positions, and raising the standard of social and religious life of their race. Ella Wheeler Wilcox has well written of the Negro race:

Infinite

The wrongs that are hoary with age. * * *
And greater than patience must be the trust
In the ultimate outcome of what is just;
And in and under and through and above
Must weave the warp of the purpose—Love.

Turning again to the missionary support and supporters. A new year begins, even before we realize the separation from the old. It holds possessions for us; they who work may win. The American Missionary Association needs larger support for its great work. What will help us most in this new year?

A good contribution from every woman's society, proportionate to the great extent of this A. M. A. mission field.

Subscriptions (fifty cents) to the magazine, THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY, that the work may be better known.

Life memberships ($30), that individuals may become allied as Life Members with the Association in its work of Christian enlightenment to these most needy people in our land.

Gifts from individual women whom God has greatly honored with stewardship.

All this will help now. It may be that some also can provide now for support to this work later on. This can be done in two ways: (1) By bequest. The American Missionary Association needs to be remembered in your will; or (2) by "Conditional Gift," a most safe and satisfactory method by which you may give your money now to the American Missionary Association, receiving from the Association an annual sum during your lifetime. This saves you all anxiety about investments, assures to you the life income agreed upon, and the principal to the use you design. (Correspondence with the Treasurer of the American Missionary Association will bring more detailed information of this method.)

So by forethought, by self-denial, by active work in state and local societies, we may each take possession of what the new year holds for us as our part in advancing this great missionary work; for the recovery and uplift of these backward races, from Alaska through the Southland to the island of the sea, numbering thirteen millions of our population. Here is our opportunity for investments that will never depreciate, but will bring returns in the life eternal.

AUDITORS' CERTIFICATE.

We have employed Frederick C. Manvel, Certified Public Accountant of the State of New York, to examine the books and accounts of H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer of the American Missionary Association, for the year ending September 30th, 1903, and herewith submit his statement of the results of his work as a part of our report.

We have also made a careful examination of all Bonds and other securities held by the Association and find the same to agree with the records in the books and balance sheet of same date.

The Treasurer's Bond was submitted to us and found to be in order.

MR. EDWIN H. BAKER, }
MR. JOHN E. LEECH, } AUDITORS.

GENTLEMEN:

In accordance with your instructions I have made an audit of the accounts of the Treasurer of the American Missionary Association for the year ending September 30th, 1903, and am able to report that I have found entire arithmetical accuracy in the entries, proper vouchers for the payments and a commendable system of bookkeeping, in which the accounts present a clear record and the facts arranged so as to be a check upon each other and practically self-balancing, enabling the result of the operations to be readily obtained, proved by the totals and grouped in detailed reports in a clear and concise manner.

I proved the totals of the receipts and payments entered in the Cash Book, compared the cancelled checks with the entries in the books, using them as vouchers. I compared the totals in the Cash Book with the entries in the monthly reports, including those of the receipts as published in The American Missionary. I have obtained from the several banks and trust companies certificates of the balances to the credit of the Association, and found the same in each instance to agree with the books of the Treasurer. I verified the postings in the General Ledger and the amounts in the Trial Balance Sheet. I assisted in the examination of the securities of the Association, verifying the statement of the Resources entered in the General Balance Sheet.

The current payments this year exceeded the receipts by the amount of $20,665.84, from which, deducting the credit balance brought forward from last year of $1,251.84, leaves a debit balance of $19,414.00 on this account at the close of the year.

Respectfully submitted,

[Signed] FREDERICK C. MANVEL,
Certified Public Accountant of State of New York.

REPORT OF THE EASTERN DISTRICT—1902-1903.

G. H. GUTTERSON, DISTRICT SECRETARY.

A large number of churches have been visited during the year. Of these only one was out of the Eastern District. The time of the Secretary has therefore been largely confined to the work in this part of New England. Nor has his work lacked for encouragement. Forty-five new churches not before visited by the Secretary have been reached during the year, many of them added to the list of contributing churches.

The State Association of Maine is one of the most cordial and useful of all our great bodies. The missionary interest among the churches of the old Pine Tree State is deep and earnest. At their annual gathering they are accustomed to welcome the representatives of our various missionary organizations, and this year, as usual, the representative of the A. M. A. was present. Missionary interest among churches is greatly increased in those commonwealths in which the state association gives a reasonable place to those who bring the messages from the various missionary societies.

Conferences have also been largely visited during the year, twelve such meetings having been reached by the District Secretary in New England. Christian Endeavor meetings and Sunday-schools in convention and connected with the local churches have also been frequently visited.

An interesting feature of the year's work in the Eastern District has been a Missionary Rally, in which the representatives of the American Board and Congregational Home Missionary Society joined with the A. M. A. in making up the program. Such rallies are of increasing value to the churches.

The Women's Home Missionary societies in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Maine each invited the Secretary to present the claims of the A. M. A. upon their platform at their annual meetings. These unions contribute much to the work and are diligent in increasing missionary interest and enthusiasm.

The total audiences addressed during the year by actual count numbered 11,510. Even in this smaller geographical district many miles must be covered in order to reach so many audiences and so large a concourse of people. Your Secretary finds that he has actually traveled 10,356 miles in the service of the churches and the Association during the year. A journey through the South, in which the conditions of school and church, mission and shop have been studied at first hand, added greatly to the usefulness and satisfaction of the year's work in this District.

Special effort was put forth in connection with the secretaries in other districts for the reduction of the deficit of the year. Pastors and prominent laymen were visited personally and written to in the interests of this movement. Although the results were not what we might have hoped, there were a considerable number of responses and some special gifts. The tendency detected in the churches is toward giving through individual gifts as well as church collection. If this increases the total all those interested in missionary work will rejoice. There is always danger, however, that those depending upon special appeal for their benevolent gifts will fail to support the work regularly and systematically, and so the stated church collection, upon which the societies largely depend, will be decreased.

Still we rejoice that there is so large and increasing interest in missionary work in this District as well as throughout the country.

REPORT OF THE WESTERN DISTRICT—1902-1903.

W. L. TENNEY, D.D., DISTRICT SECRETARY.

An important event within the District has been the change in the secretaryship. The former incumbent had served the first seven months of his twenty-fifth year under the American Missionary Association, and has served the last five months under the title "Emeritus," with such counsel and help as he could render. The new Secretary, entered promptly upon his duty May 1st. It was an immense advantage to the Association that the transition was made without the break of a day.

The office has kept up its habit of receiving inquiring and passing friends, of maintaining an epistolary touch with the leading influences of the District, of responding to the multitudinous calls of missionary societies and churches for our fresh and telling literature.

The lantern has not lost its magic for giving vivid and instructive lessons upon the varied departments of the work. The new Secretary, as well as the old, has heretofore been given to the use of such delineation for imparting entertainment and instruction.

In the spring, as usual, came the overhauling of the supply of local associations with resident members as A. M. A. representatives. Of the ninety-two associations in the District, eighty were provided for by renewal of acceptance, or by seeking new ones to take the place of those who had vacated their fields of labor. This has been an effective arm of the service, and much of gratitude is due to local pastors who have been willing to undertake it. A few of such associations have assumed this function and have appointed their own representatives, a positive improvement. Several of the state associations have taken measures to bring about a more systematic method of handling their church benevolences. In Nebraska and Washington elaborate plans are being worked.

The new Secretary has been permitted to spend a short time in the southern field since entering upon his new duties, but his brief vision of the field and workers among Negroes and Highlanders has served to confirm his faith in the message which he is proclaiming in his District.

Your Secretary desires also to here put on record his gratitude for the many letters of cordial welcome which have come to him from all parts of the West, and for the hearty and fraternal spirit in which he has been received by pastors and churches.

The season of local and state associations was just closing when your Secretary assumed office, and is just beginning as this report closes. Two state associations and three local have been attended.

The American Missionary Association is under obligation to the faithful missionaries who have freely given their services during their vacations in the Western District. The Welsh churches in Iowa have been visited by Rev Owen Thomas, and the work of this Association has been set forth by him in the Welsh language with good effect. Rev. T. M. Higginbothan, of Postville, Ia., out of his gratitude for the work accomplished for himself and his people in the southern Highlands, has consented to speak of the work among the Highlanders before the Nebraska and Colorado State Associations, and in a campaign conducted in the interests of all our societies, under the effective generalship of Rev. Frank F. Lewis, in Nebraska.

The kind response written by so many pastors in the local associations to the request that they represent our cause, and the prominent place given to the different phases of the work of the Association on the programs of the state associations, where we should otherwise not have been represented, afford reasons for hopefulness, since the financial success of the Association depends upon the intelligent interest of our pastors and churches. Many of our western churches are weak and can do but little, but even a little from each one of the more than twelve hundred churches in the West which now give nothing for the great causes entrusted to us, means more than we can ever estimate, not only for the aggressive service of the Association, but for the vigorous life of these churches as well.

Is it too much to expect that every Congregational church in the West shall during the new year take an offering for the work of the American Missionary Association, and then press on to the ideal which certainly should not be unattainable, of an offering from every member of every church?

Our Problem with the Negro in America.

SERMON

BY

REV. PHILIP S. MOXOM, D.D.

Delivered at the Annual Meeting, Cleveland, Ohio, October 20, 1903.

Now we that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.—Romans xv:1.

Fathers and Brothers of the American Missionary Association:

I am immediately moved to take up this subject by the recent unprovoked and gratuitous murder of Professor Laforest A. Planving of the Pointe Coupee Industrial and High School in Louisiana. Mr. Planving was, to some extent, a beneficiary of this Association. He was a man partly of Negro blood, thirty-three years of age, a graduate of Straight University (in 1899) and of upright, manly character, devoted to the elevation of his people and the service of his country and his God. After a short time spent in the ministry, he founded the school at Pointe Coupee and put into it all his earnings. He had the confidence and respect of the best white people in the community where he labored. He had done nothing to merit the antipathy of any man or class. He was assassinated by two white men, ambushed in a cotton field, who used guns loaded with buckshot. The motive of the deed, dastardly beyond description, does not yet appear, save as it may be found in that unreasoning and immitigable resentment, toward the members and descendants of a race for two hundred years enslaved by the whites, which is the bitter fruit of long practiced wrong and oppression.

In a special sense the deed is symptomatic. Peculiar in the enormity of its character, as being without specific motive, it is only one more expression of a state of mind in the South that is full of menace to the whole country. It thus brings before us the chronic condition which is in part the raison d'etre of this Association.

At the close of the War of the Rebellion, there were left on the hands of the nation four or five million wards—the blacks who had been made free both as a military necessity and as a tardy act of justice. Most of them were still living in the South, in the midst of their old masters. For their protection, they were enfranchised by the XVth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Since that time we have been more or less effectively engaged in solving the problem of raising this immense mass of emancipated slaves to the capacity for citizenship.

Various means and methods have been used. Of these I note but two. Politicians sought in one way, namely, by putting political power into the hands of the black man, and cultivating him as a voter. This method was pursued not altogether selfishly, though often selfishness predominated. It is idle to say that it was a mistake to enfranchise the blacks. They might conceivably have been enfranchised differently and under wiser direction, with restrictions that should wholesomely delay the full exercise of the right of suffrage; but, under the circumstances, enfranchisement was the necessary and logical step for the nation to take. The mistake was in throwing into the hands of the freedmen a degree of power and thrusting upon them a responsibility for the wise exercise and fulfillment of which they were incompetent. The opportunity was thus given to designing and unscrupulous men which they were not slow to take. The result, in some quarters of the country, was disastrous, even more to the blacks than it was to the whites.

Philanthropists sought in another way, namely, the way of education and religion. They founded schools and organized missions. Money was poured out in great streams. The American Missionary Association was already in the field. It had been at work, as a missionary agency, before the war. The moment the door was opened by the Act of Emancipation and by the collapse of the Confederacy, the Association developed new and rapidly widening enterprise. Men and women in great numbers devoted themselves with pure consecration and heroic courage and resourcefulness to this work. Undoubtedly, there were cases of foolish sentimentality and misguided zeal; but these were rare. For the most part, no enterprise was ever carried on with greater wisdom and more genuine unselfishness than the enterprise of making the emancipation of the blacks effective, by giving them the opportunity and means of practical Christian culture.

Experience brought increase of wisdom and skill; time brought increase of materials; and, from the beginning, results have justified the method. On the whole, and to a surprising degree, this way has been successful. Many thousands of Negroes of both sexes have been educated and made into good citizens. The moral and material condition of the blacks has vastly improved. Only those who are ignorant of the facts, and those who disingenuously evade the facts, deny that great progress has been made.

Many of the Southern whites—perhaps the majority of them—never have been reconciled to the enfranchisement of the Negro. The experience of the reconstruction period embittered some, and their feeling, if not justifiable, is at least explicable. At the same time, I am persuaded that it would have made no difference as to the fundamental aim of many Southern people. In one way or another they would have sought to defeat the main end of emancipation by keeping the Negro in a state of perpetual serfdom. I am not sure but that the reconstruction experience produced and deepened the conviction in many minds that the absolute end of Negro slavery had come.

There is in the South to-day a widespread antipathy to the Negro—antipathy to his approach, in any degree, to what is denominated social equality with the whites. That antipathy is strongest and most violent in the lower and more ignorant classes of the whites, but is not confined to them. In recent years it has shown itself most deplorably in frequent lynchings, accompanied often with horrible cruelty. Within fifteen years 2,000 Negroes have been shot, hanged or burned without judicial trial! The very rise of the Negro has seemed to stimulate the antipathy. The proved capacity of the blacks for liberal culture and their achievements in intellectual work contradict a fundamental theory of many Southern whites, namely, that the Negro is unalterably a lower being than the Caucasian.

It is not surprising that the education of the Negro should temporarily have the effect of sharpening the antagonism to him which is felt by people who do not seek education for themselves; but, in the long run, education will lift the Negro in the esteem of all men.

In the North there has always been a divided mind with reference to the Negroes. Many have been indifferent because they were not at all, or to only the smallest extent, in contact with them. Others have been sentimentally and unwisely partisan. Still others have shared the extreme Southern feeling. A new generation has arisen since the war, partly native, partly immigrant, having no acquaintance with the experience of the days of struggle for national existence; and of this generation a considerable number, especially of the lower class, have developed a strong antipathy to the black man.

At the present time there is a curious recrudescence of Negrophobia. In some industries there seems to be an incipient boycott against the blacks. Labor unions refuse to receive them into membership, thus closing to them many forms of industry. I am told that even the hotels are beginning to discharge them and to fill their places with white waiters. How far this has gone I do not know; but there is no doubt that the black man is excluded from most kinds of skilled labor, at least in the North. Furthermore, cases of lynching, scarcely behind those of the South in frenzied brutality, have occurred in several Northern States or at least border States. Many thoughtful people are sorely perplexed.

Extremists, like Major Vardaman of Mississippi, have openly avowed their purpose to prevent the Negro from ever becoming a social and political factor in the South. On the other hand, a large number of the more intelligent men of the South have taken a calmer and sounder view of the situation, and are seeking to promote the elevation of the Negroes by educational and moral forces. They see that there is no way out of the present evil condition save that of making the mass of the black people capable, industrious and moral. These are beginning to join hands with judicious men of the North in a common enterprise of race-betterment. Extremists, North and South, make this enterprise difficult. It is difficult enough already, in the very nature of the case, and they make it vastly more difficult; while they do absolutely no good.

At present a large number of people, all over the country, are experiencing a sort of emotional epidemic of antipathy to the black folk. What are the causes of this in the North does not yet clearly appear; as a fact, it is only too manifest. The causes in the South are partly political, partly social, and partly economic. In facing it we need to bring before our minds certain fundamental truths that should be frankly recognized and as frankly accepted. These are:

First. The Negro is here to stay. The scheme advocated by Bishop Turner and a few others is the wildest dream. No scheme of wholesale emigration is at all practicable. The mere physical difficulties are insurmountable. Suppose, for instance, it were attempted. We should have to meet at once the problem of transportation. The largest ocean steamers have a capacity for carrying from 1,200 to 1,500 passengers of all classes. The average capacity is less than 1,000. It would take one thousand large steamers to carry 1,000,000 people and then there would be some 8,000,000 more to dispose of. But this is the least of the difficulties involved in such a scheme. How it can be contemplated by rational men is past understanding.

Further, the Negro is of immense economic importance, particularly to the South. That economic importance was increased by emancipation, and it is steadily increasing through the educational and industrial training that is now being pushed with such intelligence and vigor by many schools. A general deportation of the blacks, even if it were possible, would paralyze the industries of the Southern States and destroy their growing material prosperity. The cotton crop would perish in the fields.

But, besides all this, the Negro has as much right to be here as any other citizen of this country. Some citizens were born here; many others came here of their own free will; the Negro originally came against his own will, but he has been here so long that his claim to be a native of this country is as good as that of the children of the Puritans or of the Cavaliers, and a great deal better than that of many people who despise and denounce him.

The Negroes, then, will stay in this country. Two hundred years of life and labor have made the race indigenous in America. They cannot be expatriated, or even colonized by themselves in our land; they cannot be exterminated without crime so colossal as to be inconceivable; they cannot be re-enslaved and the Republic remain on its foundations; they are essential to the industrial development of the South. We may not like it; we may wish it otherwise; but there is the fact, and we must make the best of it in sheer self-interest, even if we have no benevolence and sense of obligation to the race which has been so deeply wronged in the past.

Second. The Negro is a man—the creature and child of God. As such he has, or should have, the rights and duties of a man. This truth is fundamental. On this the American Missionary Association planted itself at the beginning of its career, and from this it has never wavered. On this it stands to-day without evasion and without apology. As a people we shall never have peace until it is frankly and fully accepted.

Lying back of much of the antipathy to the Negro, which exists in the South to-day, is the doubt as to the proper humanity of the black man. Dixon's novel, "The Leopard's Spots," was applauded by many readers in the North as well as in the South; yet the idea that the Negro is not properly a man strikes through that book like a stain; it cannot be eliminated without destroying the book. But we must get rid of that idea, or cease to remain Christian. It is true that Christian men and women have held that idea, just as they have held many other un-Christian ideas. But once an idea is brought clearly into consciousness as wrong, once it appears as subversive of the fundamental principle of Christianity, it must be abandoned, or the immitigable plague of sin against light will surely fall upon the transgressors. A good man, through ignorance, may do evil deeds and not wholly forfeit his claim to goodness; but when light comes and the evil is clearly seen, the goodness can persist only by a rejection of the newly recognized evil. The Christian law of love, bearing in itself the essential principle of Divine justice, requires that a man shall have a man's sympathy, fair-dealing and help, irrespective of color, race, or condition. It is as true of the black man as of the white that "all ye are one in Christ."

There is confusion, at this point, in many minds. To love one's neighbor as one's self is not necessarily to like him, to wish for his companionship, to take him into the most intimate relations. Liking depends on affinity, on similarity of tastes, on various elements of correspondence. But love, in the deep, broad sense of the Christian law, is a steady disposition of good will to our fellow man, whatever his race or condition, and a steady purpose to do him good and not evil, to treat him with justice, to give him sympathy and help as a brother man, to the full measure of our power.

On the ground of anthropology, the Negro is a man. On the ground of the Christian revelation, he is a creature and child of God. He is the object of Christ's mission of salvation as much as the proud Caucasian or the obsequious Hindu. At the point of simple manhood all distinctions vanish. On this ground, I say, the American Missionary Association has loyally stood, and all its great work has been motived and directed by the Christian obligation of justice and good will. To this ground the nation must come, or continue to find its race problem an unceasing source of internal fever and tumult and discord.

Third. The Negro will be a beneficent or maleficent force in our civilization according as he is or is not qualified for good citizenship and assured the rights and opportunities that belong to responsible citizenship. The ballot, once given him, cannot justly be taken away, save under conditions that apply equally to the white man. Ignorance or viciousness may rightly exclude one from political suffrage, but not the color of his skin.

The ballot ought not to be taken away from the black man simply because he is black. The repeal of the XVth Amendment, if it were possible, would be a step backward toward despotism and even barbarism. What would the Grand Army of the Republic say to such a proposition? The very graves of a million patriots would heave with protesting groans. What would the Church of Christ say? Alas! too often she has been bound by old prejudice or by modern convention. Yet, surely, more than ever in the past, she stands to-day for justice and humanity to man.

The present is a time for sober reflection and the clear realization of THIS: that the only effective remedy for the evils of the situation in which we find ourselves as a people is the one that is being applied to-day by Hampton and Talladega, and Tuskegee and Atlanta, and Fisk and Tougaloo, and a half score more of similar institutions.

But the difficulty of our task is only partly with the blacks. The whites are more at fault, for they have far greater opportunity and power and they furnish an even more serious feature of the problem. They, too, must be educated and humanized and raised to a higher moral level. The present ebulition of race feeling, manifesting itself in outrageous action, is an appalling disclosure of the white man's defect. Were he better, wiser, more just, our problem would be vastly simplified; indeed our problem would be well on its way to solution.

It has been pointed out by observing writers on the South that the sons of the planters and slaveholders of the ante-bellum days are more reasonable and just, in dealing with the blacks, than the sons of the "poor whites" and than many of those who for economic and political reason have gone into the South since the war. There is a great multitude of whites that need educating and Christianizing. It is not unjust to say that their need is even greater than that of the blacks, for these whites have freedom and power, and therefore responsibility, far greater than the Negroes have attained. For a long time to come the whites will make the laws and social canons and determine conditions of labor in the South. To do this wisely and justly they need education in the broadest sense. This need is so urgent and manifest that the American Missionary Association is pushing educational enterprise among the whites. This is no departure from its original purpose. Its charter qualifies it to work in all the world and among all races. Its first work was among the Southern whites. Reasons of expediency and economy have brought about the limitation of its work to our own land, but nothing has limited that work to the colored races. For many years it has labored effectually in the highlands of Kentucky and Tennessee and other States. Now it is pushing into the lowlands with its schools, and it finds invitation and opportunity far beyond its present means to meet.

The recrudescence of antipathy to the black race, that is so widespread to-day, is affecting the attitude of many people toward the enterprise of Negro education. Is it lessening the zeal and the contributions of those who have supported our work? I cannot think so. Said one of the secretaries to me recently: "The constituency of the American Missionary Association is more deeply interested in the work and more solidly convinced of its vital importance than ever before."

And yet the need far outruns our resources. We should have at least half a million dollars a year for the general work, and a million for immediate endowment of our higher institutions. To lessen our work now would be like stopping the flow of water because a conflagration has blazed up with a temporary access of fury. Rather let us enlarge and multiply the streams. We are on the right track; it is no time to turn back, or even to slacken our pace. The North is bidden by fierce Southern demagogues to "let the South alone"; but there is no interference. The Southern States have, and long have had, a free hand in State legislation. Many of them have revised or re-made their constitutions, changing the conditions of suffrage. The one thing that the North persists in doing, and will persist in doing, is to help the better people of the South in dealing with the great task of emancipating the Negroes from ignorance and vice, and educating the masses of the whites to a capacity for just and wise citizenship. This it must do, for the evil does not belong to the South alone; it affects all the country.

But I turn again to a consideration of the Negro. For him we need not less but more schools; for him we must continually emphasize industrial training—not as an exclusive regimen, but as a constant and widely extended feature of our educational scheme. Mission work must go on, and the continuous production of capable Negro preachers, teachers, and industrial leaders. All this makes for the desired end.

Nothing should be allowed to obscure the fact that great advance has already been made—increase in property, increase in intelligence and improvement in character. In August was held the fourth annual session of the National Negro Business League. It is composed of colored men and women engaged in various lines of business—in fact, nearly every line pursued by white men. Among its members are factory operatives, blacksmiths, hotel keepers, pharmacists, bankers, etc. It is representative of a great economic advance, and, as the Outlook justly said, "Forms an unanswerable argument that the American Negro is not unworthy of public confidence and respect." Three years ago one of our secretaries showed that within thirty-five years the Negro has reduced the illiteracy of his people 45 per cent. At that time there were 1,500,000 Negro children in common schools, 40,000 Negro students in higher institutions, 30,000 Negro teachers, and 17,000 Negro graduates. Already there were 500 Negro physicians, 250 Negro lawyers, and a total property, real and personal, owned by Negroes, of $490,000,000. No wonder Professor Du Bois asks somewhat bitterly, "Do Americans ever stop to reflect that there are a million people of Negro blood, well educated, owners of homes, against the honor of whose womanhood no breath was ever raised, whose men occupy positions of trust and usefulness, and who, judged by any standard, have reached the fullest measure of the best type of modern European culture? Is it fair, is it decent, is it Christian to ignore these facts of the Negro problem?"

The number of educated and industrious Negroes is quite as large as we could expect, after only thirty-eight years of labor on such unpromising material. If vice and crime still abound among the blacks, it must in justice be said that the graduates of our schools furnish no candidates for the jails and poor houses.

What the Negro needs is not a peculiar and unique kind of training, but the kind of training that all imperfectly civilized races need—the training that shall teach the necessity and the essential dignity of productive labor, the necessity and worth of righteousness, and the obligation of cleanliness and courtesy and self-support and obedience to law and service to the community and the State. President Frissell, in a thoughtful article in the Outlook for August 15, says: "The aims of Negro education must be the same as those for any other race; but differences in conditions necessitate differences in methods. While every opportunity for advanced training should be given to those capable of receiving it, there seems no doubt that in the education of most of the leaders as well as of the masses of the colored race stress should be laid upon the sort of education which, at the same time that it imparts economic independence, develops mind and character We believe with General Armstrong that an institution especially devoted to colored youth must provide a training more than usually comprehensive; must include both sexes and a variety of occupations; must produce moral as well as mental strength; and while making its students first-rate mechanics, must also make them first-rate men and women. The foundation of character must be the first consideration. The Negro lacks continuity. He turns easily from one thing to another. Therefore he should be encouraged to anchor himself by buying land and establishing a home. The creation of an intelligent work-habit is one of the most important features of his education. The habit of working systematically and steadily should be formed in the public schools. It is there that a love for agriculture and other industrial pursuits may most easily be instilled." After a concise statement of the method pursued in various schools for colored people, President Frissell concludes: "The shop and the farm as well as books are needed to make a truly educated man. This is true of every part of our country, but it is especially true of the South, where eighty per cent. of the whole population live in the country, and it applies still more particularly to the Negro, whose salvation is to be won out of the soil."

The practical principle thus laid down by President Frissell has no finer exemplification than it has in the methods of our own schools. Our conception of education for the blacks is not narrow, but broad; and our work, while recognizing and meeting the need of industrial training, is not forgetful of the equally urgent need of developing intelligence and power of thought and creating ideals of character and life which must lift the people like celestial gravitation.

It will be well for us now to consider, for a moment, also what the intelligent Negro wants and claims for himself. In the Congregationalist for August 1 there was an article by a Negro that ought to have wide and careful reading. I quote from it several paragraphs.

"What, then, does he want? First of all, he pleads for an industrial democracy. I mean by this a chance to work at anything for which his talents fit him, and to receive the same pay as others for similar services. This is denied him all over the country, but, strange to say, has on the whole a juster recognition South in certain things than in any other section. The right to work is sacred, and the wage of the laborer is his reward. The Negro cannot see why this does not apply to him; and yet he rejoices that there is progress in this matter.

"He hates ignorance, and realizes that intelligence is the pedestal of democracy. He seeks the American right of light, and he is grateful for the Northern hand of philanthropy that has supplemented the perhaps necessarily meagre advantages for education furnished by his own section. * * * The Negro believes in law and order. Accused of a crime, he claims the American right of a trial by jury. He feels grieved that in the last fifteen years two thousand of his race have been summarily hanged, shot or burned. He stands as no apologist for crime. * * * If a man, white or black, lays unholy hands on a woman, white or black, let him die the death at the hands of the law and not of a mob. Mobocracy and democracy do not agree. * * *

"Then, the Negro feels that it is unbecoming to an American citizen not to be interested in the government. He wants to vote and be voted for, not only in Massachusetts, but in Mississippi. He regards the ballot box the ark of the American covenant. Though the cart that bears it totter, none may lay unholy hands upon it with impunity. He asks for no ignorant, no corrupt ballot. Put up any fair test—education, or property, or both—and apply it to white and black alike, and he will make no objection. In fact, it is what he seeks. * * *

"Finally, what does the Negro want socially? That is the tender spot, especially in the South. Now, frankly, what does the young Negro think about it? Does he desire so-called social equality for himself? No and yes! No, if you mean by this his intrusion into private circles where he is not wanted; no gentleman would do that.

Yes, if you mean his desire for freedom to do like other people in matters of this sort—whether it be eating at a table, visiting a friend, sleeping in a hotel, riding in a car, attending a school, uniting with a church, going to a social or marrying. He wants to be let alone to do just as other people do. And pray, why not? Some wild Indians recently dined with the President and nothing was thought of it; but when a civilized Negro did it some of our Southern friends acted like wild Indians."

To this I add several pregnant sentences from that striking and pathetic book, "The Souls of Black Folk," by Professor Du Bois of Atlanta University, a man who notably illustrates the capacity of the Negro to develop the finest fibre and take the finest polish of culture.

"The Negro," he says, "simply wishes to make it possible for a man to be both a Negro and an American, without being cursed and spit upon by his fellows, without having the doors of Opportunity closed roughly in his face." Representative Negroes, like the Grimkes, Kelly Miller, J. W. E. Bowen and others, ask for three things: The right to vote, civic equality, and the education of youth according to ability. "They do not ask," says Professor Du Bois, "that ignorant black men vote when ignorant whites are debarred, or that any reasonable restrictions in the suffrage should not be applied; they know that the low social level of the mass of the race is responsible for much discrimination against it, but they also know, and the nation knows, that relentless color-prejudice is more often a cause than a result of the Negro's degradation; they seek the abatement of this relic of barbarism, and not its systematic encouragement and pampering by all agencies of social power from the Associated Press to the Church of Christ."

On the aim of education he says: "The final product of our training must be neither a psychologist nor a brick mason, but a man. And to make men, we must have ideals, broad, pure, and inspiring ends of living—not sordid money-getting, not apples of gold."

A few weeks later, in the same paper, appeared an article which indicates something of what the intelligent and liberal white Southerner wants and claims for the Negro. The writer is Professor Edwin Mims of Trinity College, Durham, N C. After setting forth the harm that is done by extremists both North and South, and giving high and deserved praise to Booker Washington, Professor Mims says: "More and more I believe that the statement of truth is a question of emphasis. The liberals of all races and sections need now to unite on these three particular measures: opposition to lynching under any and all circumstances; the education of the Negro—especially, for the masses, industrial education; and political justice under the amended constitutions of the Southern States. By doing this much they will do much to discredit all extreme men."

At this point the better South and the better North are at one. Certainly, one thing all good citizens must seek, North and South, and that is, respect for law and unfaltering obedience to it in every part of the land. Mob rule is anarchy, and lynching is not justice, but at once the caricature and contradiction of justice.

But, positively and constructively, the great enterprise demanding new devotion and fresh consecration of thought and time and money is just this work which the American Missionary Association has prosecuted and is prosecuting with increased intelligence and zeal. Men and brethren, this is no private enterprise, either of a party or a denomination; it is Christ's enterprise. It is He who calls. It is His spirit that urges us forward. We have not one race but two races to save—not by amalgamation, not by the subjection of the one to the other, but by bringing both races to mutual understanding, sympathy, respect and co-operation in fulfilling the mission of this great country to mankind.

The appeal of the blacks to the whites for help and guidance is all the more pathetic and powerful because it is only imperfectly voiced, and is the appeal of condition rather than of conscious intelligence. The mass of them will have advanced far when they once clearly recognize their need. Their few leaders are doing noble work, but, as yet, they "are few and far between." The number of these must be increased, in order that the multitude may be reached and shepherded by men capable of guiding them, whom they will trust and whose counsels they will follow.

The appeal is to the whites because they are the strong race—strong with an inheritance of centuries of freedom and political experience and culture and industrial skill and moral training. To them the injunction of the apostle comes with singular fitness and force: "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." It is the injunction of the Master, himself, to a nation great, rich and powerful. Shall we hear it and obey, with patience and charity, with unflinching self-sacrifice and intelligent zeal, until the black race in America shall stand up in the disciplined strength and chastened self-respect of a developed Christian manhood and womanhood?

BRIEF HISTORY.

Organization. The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846. It is distinctively a Christian missionary society to spread the gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity. It was organized with pronounced opposition to slavery, which then existed, and against all race and caste prejudice, which still exists. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the Amistad Committee, the Union Missionary Society, the Committee for West India Missions among the recently emancipated slaves of Jamaica, and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society for work among the American Indians.

In the foreign field, in 1854, its laborers numbered seventy-nine, located in West Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt among the Copts, Canada among the colored refugees and in North America among the Indians.

The home departments embraced two distinct fields, the West and the South. There were 112 home missionaries employed by the Association in 1860, fifteen of them being located in the slave states and in Kansas.

The missions in the slave states gave rise to some of the most stirring events in the history of the Association, which has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts, while slavery existed, to organize churches and schools in the South on an avowedly anti-slavery basis.

Among the Negroes. The crisis so long impending came at length, and the Union armies, entering the South in 1861, opened the way for the instruction and elevation of the colored people. The Association felt itself providentially prepared to engage in this work, and the first systematic effort for their relief was made by it. Large numbers of "contrabands," or escaping fugitive slaves, were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, Va., and were homeless and destitute. The Association, on the 17th of September, 1861, established the first day-school among the freedmen. That little school laid the foundation for the Hampton Institute which the Association founded later, and was the forerunner of the hundreds that have followed.

The Proclamation of Emancipation, dated January 1, 1863, insured the permanent freedom of Negroes who reached the Union lines. The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Norfolk the school of the previous year now numbered 1,200 pupils. Teachers were also sent to Newbern and Roanoke Island, N. C., to Beaufort, Hilton Head, St. Helena and Ladies' Island, S. C., and to St. Louis, Mo.; and its force was scattered over the field held by our armies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.

Close of the War. Freedmen's Bureau. Boston Council. The year 1865 was marked by the close of the Civil War, by the establishment, by act of Congress, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the holding of a National Council of Congregational Churches in Boston, which recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted to carry it forward. The Association accepted the responsibility, appointed district secretaries at Chicago, Cincinnati and Boston, and collecting agents in other portions of the Northern states. It also solicited funds in Great Britain, and succeeded in securing that year a little more than the $250,000 recommended by the Council. Its receipts from all sources ran up from $47,828 in 1861 to $253,045 in 1866, and $420,769 in 1870.

But in the South there came a reign of terror under the infamous Ku-Klux-Klans—the Thugs of America. The colored people were often assaulted by mobs, dragged from their homes at midnight, and shot down in the streets. But there was no want of courage on the part of our teachers to enter or remain in the field; the number of teachers, which was 320 in 1865, was enlarged to 528 in 1867, 532 in 1868, and 533 in 1870.

Permanent Educational Institutions. It was during this very period that the beginnings were made for most of our permanent educational institutions. The Association must train the teachers and preachers for this people.

The Association now sustains as higher institutions: Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas; and Piedmont College, Georgia, together with forty-four normal and graded schools and fourteen common schools scattered over the South and among the mountains, six schools among the Indians, twenty among the Chinese on the Pacific Coast, one in Alaska and two in Porto Rico.

Theological departments have also been established in Howard University, Fisk University, Talladega College and Straight University. Industrial instruction first began in Southern mission schools in Talladega, Ala., and was early introduced into many of our schools and has been constantly extended. Talladega College and Tougaloo University have large farms. In all the larger institutions and normal schools mechanical arts are taught to the boys, and household work, cooking, sewing, washing, nursing, etc., to the girls. From these schools go forth annually hundreds of well-qualified teachers and ministers.

Church Planting. Simultaneously with the founding of these permanent institutions the Association began the planting of churches among the freedmen. They were formed mainly in connection with the educational institutions, and were intended to be models of true church life. The work of church planting has been pressed forward with a steady hand until the churches now number 252, located in nearly all the states of the South, among the Negroes the mountaineers and the Indians, with most fruitful results. Sunday-schools, temperance efforts and revivals of religion have been marked features in the work. Christian Endeavor Societies were promptly organized and have been rapidly multiplied.

Conferences or associations have been formed, and of these there are now nine, designated as the Conferences of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Mountain Work. The early labors of the Association in home mission work were directed to the white people of the West and South. The mountain region of the Central South embraces West Virginia, southwestern Virginia, southeastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee and portions of northern Georgia and northern Alabama. It is 500 miles long and 200 miles wide, and contains a population of about 2,000,000, seven-eighths of whom are white. Churches, preaching stations and schools have been established along or near the line of railroads traversing the mountain districts, or in regions not yet reached by such communications, where thousands of Highlanders live. Schools, churches and missions are now established in the mountain regions of five Southern States. The schools give prominence to normal and industrial training, sending out each year a large number of well-trained teachers who, taking charge of the district schools, are making them over after the best models. Strategic points are occupied by these institutions, such as Williamsburg, Ky.; Grand View, Pleasant Hill and La Follette, Tenn.; Joppa, Ala.; Saluda, Blowing Rock and Whittier, N. C. The preaching of an intelligent gospel and the establishment of Sunday-schools, Mission Bands, Mothers' Circles and Christian Endeavor Societies contribute greatly to the development of these interesting Highlanders in their domestic and social life as well as that distinctively religious.

The Indians. Some of the earliest labors of the Association were among the Indians. In 1852 it had twenty-one missionaries stationed among the Indians of the Northwest. Various causes conspired to the gradual diminution of these missions. But in 1882 an arrangement was made with the American Board by which it transferred to the Association its Indian missions in this country, and the Association withdrew from missions in foreign lands. At the time of the transfer the Association had missions at S'kokomish, Wash., Leach Lake, Minn., and Spokane Falls. The transfer from the Board committed to its care the mission and school at the Santee Agency, Neb., Oahe, S. D., with outlying stations on the Cheyenne and White Rivers, and the mission and school at Fort Berthold, N. D. Since these missions and schools came under the care of the Association the facilities and force of workers have been increased, and missions have been added at Fort Yates, N. D.; Rosebud, S. D.; the Crow Agency, Mont., and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency, Oklahoma. The churches number twenty, with a membership of 1,571. Schools number six, with 319 pupils. The out-stations number fifty.

Alaska. Our Alaskan Mission at Cape Prince of Wales was formed in 1890. It is now entirely supported by the special contributions sent to our treasury for this purpose. In connection with the educational and mission work a herd of reindeer is in the care of a missionary. The report of our missionaries in Alaska presents a very hopeful picture of work among the Eskimos.

Chinese in America. The American Missionary Association was one of the pioneers in mission service among the Chinese immigrants to California. It began the work as early as 1852. In 1874 Dr. W. C. Pond, pastor of the Bethany Church, San Francisco, was appointed superintendent.

The number of workers is forty-eight, and schools twenty, located at Bakersfield, Berkeley, Fresno, Los Angeles, Marysville, Oakland, Oroville, Pasadena, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Ventura, two at Santa Cruz, and three in San Francisco.

Over a thousand of these pagans have come into the Christian life, and a number of them have returned to their native land as missionaries.

The converted Chinamen have long desired the establishment of missions in their native country, to which, if they should return thither, they might resort as a Christian home, and from which they might go forth for mission work among their countrymen. The Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions, and which was organized in 1886, and commenced work in China in 1890, has already contributed above $15,000 to missions in China. With this they have established headquarters at Canton with property worth $40,000. They have also property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty years' lease of a good chapel in Ci Ning City, where they have organized a church.

Porto Rico. The American Missionary Association follows the flag. It did this in the Civil War, bringing the blessings of Christian instruction to the Negroes. It followed the same course at the close of the war with Spain. Porto Rico came under the flag and became a part of the national territory. The responsibility for the Christian instruction of the people fell with especial force upon our American churches. The American Missionary Association carefully investigated the field through representatives who were sent to the island. The need was found to be very great. There was an immediate demand for well-appointed Christian schools for the instruction of children and youth, and also for the preaching of a broad and free gospel to the people. In 1899 eight teachers were sent to this field to establish and maintain these schools, and an evangelist to preach the gospel as widely as possible throughout the island. Four churches, with 477 members, are now organized.

Two schools have been established. One is located at Santurce, near San Juan, a strategic position for a large work; the other is at Lares, in the western portion of the island. The pastors also hold a circuit of preaching stations through the eastern portion of the island, where there are scarcely any other missionary efforts. There is great need for increased income to the Association to meet the demands of this large and growing field.

Bureau of Woman's Work. Formed in 1883. It gives direction and efficiency to the various lines of women's aid to the American Missionary Association. Women's State Missionary Unions and organizations co-operate in raising funds for the prosecution of the work of the Association.

Publications. The American Missionary magazine is issued in ten monthly numbers by this Association each year. It contains fresh information from the mission fields, the reports of importance of various committees and other matters of value to those studying these great mission fields. The magazine is published at fifty cents per year. It is generously illustrated, and presents in new form fresh material in each issue.

Congregational Work, the organ of all our Congregational societies, represents each month the work of the American Missionary Association.

A large number of interesting leaflets, bringing the most recent information obtainable, are also published. They are issued for general use and are distributed as desired among those interested in these great national and religious problems.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to employ an expert accountant to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with the statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statements when approved by the accountant. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. This book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the members of the Executive Committee and the record shall be so added to and amended, from time to time, under the direction of the Finance Committee, as to show at all times a correct statement of the property of the Association, and of any special trusts in its hands. COMMITTEE ON SUPPORT.—It shall be the duty of this Committee to meet at least once in two months to consider methods of promoting a missionary spirit throughout the churches, and of securing from the churches and friends of missions by addresses and publications, and through the various district offices and agencies and otherwise, the amounts required for the support and constant enlargement of the work, and to report to the Executive Committee such recommendations as shall seem desirable.

Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee) and consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in May or June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its own work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Chairman of the three Standing Committees.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES may be appointed from time to time as required. Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee. All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

APPEALS.—Every appointee of the Association has the fullest liberty of appeal to the Executive Committee. Such communications shall be referred to the appropriate Committee according to the part of the field from which they come, for examination and a report on the matter involved, at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, when they shall receive careful attention in executive session.

ART. IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, except that which relates immediately to the Treasurer's department, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various Standing Committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient work of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of each member of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees, and to the Executive Committee, all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

All appointments of missionaries, whether they are to act as pastors or general missionaries, presidents and professors of chartered institutions, principals of high and normal schools, district secretaries, field superintendents and other agents, and all matters involving questions of property or affecting the policy of the Association, shall be referred to the Executive Committee for final action.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all money contributed or intrusted to the Association, and to give receipts therefor; to deposit it to the credit of the Association in such bank or institution as may be designated by the Finance Committee; to keep clear and accurate accounts of all sums received and expended by the Association; to make payments and remittances in accordance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to endorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purpose of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them; to conduct the correspondence relating immediately to his department, and to perform such other acts as are necessary to the faithful execution of the duties of his office.

His books of account and vouchers for payment shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

It shall be his duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee such financial business as needs their action.

ART. VI.—DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches and in other ways disseminate information concerning the condition and needs of the Association throughout the districts assigned to them. They shall also collect funds, and perform such other duties as may be required. They shall keep in constant conference with the New York office and every month shall send to it, for the Executive Committee, a report of their work the previous month and of the condition of the interests of the Association in their several districts.

ART. VII.—CHECKS AND PAYMENTS.

AIM AND WORK.

To preach the gospel to the poor. It originated in a sympathy with the almost friendless slaves, and in its work recognizes no distinction of race or color. Since emancipation, it has devoted its main efforts to the South, endeavoring to prepare the FREEDMEN for their duties as citizens and Christians in America, and as missionaries in Africa. It also establishes missions and schools on the anti-caste basis among the WHITES, especially in the mountain districts. As closely related to this, it seeks to benefit the caste-persecuted CHINESE in America, and to extend the blessings of the gospel and civilization to the INDIANS of North America. In view of the necessity of elevating the WOMEN of these races, the Association has a BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK, to which it especially invites the co-operation of the Christian women of the churches.

MEMBERSHIP.

A payment of THIRTY DOLLARS will constitute a person a life member. (See Article III of the Constitution.)

LEGACIES.

Important legacies have been lost to the Association by informality. Care should be taken to give full name, "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION." The following form of bequest may be used:

I GIVE AND BEQUEATH the sum of———dollars to "The American Missionary Association," incorporated by act of the Legislature of the State of New York.

The will should be attested by three witnesses (in some states three are required—in other States only two), who should write against their names their places of residence (if in cities the street and number.) The following form of attestation will answer for every State in the Union: "Signed, sealed, published and declared by the said (A. B.,) as his last will and testament in the presence of us, who at the request of said (A. B.,) and in his presence, and in the presence of each other have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses." In some States it is required that charitable bequests should be made at least two months before the death of the testator; but this rule does not apply to bequests in the State of New York to this Association.

Report of Committee on Finance.

The Report of the Committee on Finance was read by Mr. H. Clark Ford, Ohio. It was voted to receive the Report and place it on file. The following is the Report:

The Committee on Finance reports that the system of bookkeeping and the monthly auditing and certification of accounts by professional examiners has been continued as heretofore, as also the examination of securities owned by the Association, by a Committee of the Association in the presence of a public accountant. The Certificate of the Public Examiner is on file.

Your Committee calls earnest attention of the friends of the Association to the Conditional Gift Plan. The amount received from this source last year was $27,000, and it occurs to the Committee that possibly the attractive features of this method of benevolence may not be fully understood by the people to whom we look for means to sustain and enlarge our work.

Here is presented an opportunity for those who contemplate eventual gifts to the Association, First, to insure to the giver a reasonable income on the amount donated during his or her natural life, with the certainty that it will be paid half-yearly, precisely as if the investment were in a bond of the highest class. Second, the assurance that the gift will be applied according to the wishes of the giver, avoiding absolutely the uncertainties which attach to a legacy. Litigation over bequests is now so frequent, so expensive and often so disastrous in result, that a method by means of which such a contingency is avoided should commend itself to conservative men and women.

We earnestly urge upon our friends generous support of the great work that we have undertaken to the end that the present debt may speedily be extinguished and funds supplied for enlargement of this most important missionary enterprise.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH E. BROWN,
A. LYMAN WILLISTON,
H. CLARK FORD,
JOHN H. PERRY,

Vote of Thanks.

The following vote of thanks was passed:

As we approach the end of a remarkable week in Congregational history, the sense of the good guidance of our God and of the wisdom and kindness of our brethren is being deepened and strengthened. For many years the feasibility of joint anniversaries has been a matter of speculation and debate among us. It was a gracious providence that moved Plymouth Church to send, and the last Council and the Societies to accept, a challenge to determine this question by actual test. The result has been one of the most remarkable meetings in our history. We linger amid our farewells to express our appreciation and gratitude.

In the name of the Council and of the Societies, equal sharers in the boundless and graceful hospitality of this generous community, in inadequate words, but with appreciative hearts, we acknowledge an obligation which no resolutions can discharge.

The location of the city churches has made the situation unique and interesting; and the broad catholicity which has placed these beautiful buildings at our disposal affords an impressive illustration of the possibilities of that Christian unity and federation for service to which this body has given its enthusiastic sanction. To that wise, ubiquitous, untiring pastor, whose foresight and extraordinary organizing and executive ability have made this week possible and so eminently successful, Dr. Hodgdon; to the pastors and people of every denomination whose tactful personal attentions, whose freely opened homes and houses of worship have made us feel that all things here were ours, brought to us the joy of being ministered unto, and to them, we hope, the joy of ministering, we return our hearty thanks.

We are a singing people; we have a theology, aspirations, experiences that can be sung as well as preached. The music of the splendid choir of this church, the courtesy of its remarkable organizer and leader, have been a daily refreshment and inspiration, and have taught us how this indispensable part of our worship may be enriched and made more effective in lifting the heart to Him whose fellowship our forms seek to make more real. Changing a little the familiar lines, we are ready to affirm:

"And in the spirit's secret cell"
Shall "hymn and prayer forever dwell."

We recognize the gravity and delicacy of the tasks imposed upon the presiding officers and committees of such a body—tasks which only unusual wisdom and patience, seasoned with grace, can enable one to perform. We have been fortunate here in the services of men who have a genius for such duties. There can be no disparagement of the men who have served us in other years in asserting that we have here had a new revelation of the gentle firmness of the born executive, the mind of the statesman, and the heart of the Christian brother. Of all these brethren we may unhesitatingly say, when the lot fell upon them it was divinely ordered for the comfort of Israel.

In these days every enterprise, every convention which deserves a hearing and courts influence among men, is dependent upon the daily press. It is one of the blessings of modern American life that our newspapers give such cordial and careful attention to the subjects with which the religious world is busy. The printing press makes the world our audience and opens to us the universal heart and mind. We gratefully recognize the service rendered the denomination and the religious world by the Des Moines papers in the full and accurate reports of our sessions they have daily published.

To the railroads, for reduced rates and thoughtful attentions, to all organizations and individuals who have by kindly word or act aided us in our work and added to our comfort we give our sincere thanks and ask for them the divine blessing.

We are in the closing moments of a remarkable religious gathering, denominational, but in the widest sense Christian and humanitarian. Influences born here will affect the thinking, the faith and life of the Christian world. For the blessing of sharing in this privilege, for the great messages we have received, for the new revelations of the common Fatherhood and the universal brotherhood, for personal stimulus and uplift, for the increase of denominational self-respect and hope, let us render unfeigned praise to Him who is over all and through all and in us all, and, in the name of our Lord and Master, let us move on to a better life and a larger service.

Attest: ASHER ANDERSON,
Recording Secretary.

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1904.

GENERAL SURVEY.

In presenting this fifty-eighth annual report your Committee first of all reaffirms its faith in those radical teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ concerning human brotherhood, for the defence of which the American Missionary Association was originally formed and to the exemplification of which it has devoted its efforts. The past few years have witnessed significant changes in the social and civil standing of the dependent races in our land. New problems appear and new measures prevail. But through all possible changes in racial conditions or in public opinion concerning them—through all possible readjustment in methods of work—this Association finds its motive and inspiration in the fact that the men of all races are brothers to each other, and that "we who are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." We are not, therefore, concerned with discussions of race superiority or inferiority, equality or inequality, we believe in fraternity—the fraternity of all men in Jesus Christ—and we accept for ourselves and urge upon others its insistent and universal obligations.

In this spirit our manifold and diversified work has been carried forward through another year. Its general features have been the same as heretofore. Seven different races, differing widely from each other in character and condition, have been ministered to through church and school. Seven hundred and fifty missionaries, bearing our commission, have preached and taught among these various peoples. The work has been greatly blest. Multitudes have heard the Word. Leaders have been trained for future usefulness. Many have been brought to a saving knowledge of Christ.

We are a home missionary society, in that our work is done at home and not abroad; but our special mission continues to be, as it has always been, among those who are most in need of Christian sympathy and encouragement, who are least able to care for themselves, who lack the opportunities of Christian education and the influences of Christian institutions such as will develop character, fit them for citizenship and give them true ideals of life.

This special and definite mission determines the method of our work. We are compelled, as no other home society is, to use both church and school, to send both preacher and teacher. Our work is at once educational and evangelistic. But the work is not divided. It presents, everywhere, one common and united effort for the redemption of society and the saving of men.

The first mission of the Association in the South after the Civil War was among the freedmen, and its chief agency was the primary or common school. Since that time great changes have occurred. There is now a New South. More than half of the negroes can read and write; a "talented tenth" are well advanced in intelligence and character and have become industrious and useful citizens with homes of their own. A public school system, poor and inadequate though it be, has been established in every State. We have, therefore, now few common schools, although three-fifths of our pupils are still in the primary and intermediate grades. The common school, especially in connection with our churches in country places, still has its claim upon us. But by far the most important work done by us in the South is of a more advanced sort. We need now to train teachers and leaders. We have, therefore, thirty-eight Normal and Graded schools among the colored people. These are in both city and country. Ten of them are boarding-schools. Nearly all have industrial work. All are character builders. The influence of these thirty-eight schools upon the moral development of the race and the civilization of the country cannot be measured. They extend in an orderly system from Virginia to Arkansas, and everywhere are centers of light and hope to the people.

A special effort has been made the past year to adjust the work of these schools to the changing needs of the times, establishing manual training and industrial work and strengthening the upper grades. The one obstacle that has been encountered is the lack of funds. Under the compulsion of retrenchment two of our oldest and largest schools are to be eliminated. These are Storrs in Atlanta, and Slater in Knoxville. Splendid schools they were, with a noble record of service and sacrifice. The public school system of these cities has so advanced that the loss of our work there would be less felt than elsewhere, and they are given up. A fine new schoolhouse has been built in Florence, Ala., to which the Burrell School, formerly in Selma, Ala., has been transferred. An especially encouraging feature connected with the reopening of this school has been the generous co-operation of the white people of the town and vicinity. At Dorchester Academy, McIntosh, Ga., the recitation hall was burned December 16th. A few weeks later the large Benedict Hall of the Joseph K. Brick School in Enfield, N. C., was totally consumed. Work is rapidly approaching completion on new buildings at both these schools. The school at Pointe Coupee, La., where the colored principal was murdered a year ago, is closed. A new principal made a heroic attempt to carry the school on, but the lives of all the teachers were threatened and they were recalled.

Our Chartered Institutions are the most valuable asset in our educational plant. Talladega College, Ala., has had a notable year. After long waiting it has secured an able and accomplished president, who was inaugurated June 6th. On Easter Day the new and beautiful De Forest Memorial Chapel was dedicated. The college has received a gift of $15,000 from Mr. Andrew Carnegie for a new library building which is now in process of erection. Early in the summer the large model barn was destroyed by fire, and the loss has been supplied by a new structure. The Manual Training shops have been enlarged, and a water and sewage system is being installed. These improvements have been made without drawing upon the current funds of the Association. Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., has been greatly strengthened by new members of its faculty during the past year and is anticipating the renewal of its Theological Department, through the transfer of the theological professor from Straight. Straight University, New Orleans, La., has suffered the loss of several members of its faculty, but with new teachers its good work goes on. Tougaloo University, Miss., has had a hard year because of drought and other calamities, but the high standard of excellence in its teaching force has been well maintained, and it has been cheered by special benefactions. Tillotson College, Austin, Tex., has a new president, its faculty has been reorganized and a good start made upon the new year.

More than twenty years ago schools were planted by our Association in the Southern mountains. They have taken root and grown, and we have now a fine system of graded and boarding schools among these hardy mountaineers. Williamsburg Academy in Kentucky has an excess of riches in the multitude of its students and a dearth of accommodations for them. The girls' dormitory, which was burned nearly two years ago, has not yet been replaced. It ought to be.

Moving down from the mountains we have in Piedmont College, Demorest, Georgia, our single institution of college grade attended by white students. The students of Piedmont come both from the mountains and the plains. There is plain living but high thinking. More devoted teachers or more earnest students can nowhere be found. With its new president the good work begun is making substantial progress.

Atlanta Theological Seminary is the only theological school of any denomination for white students in four adjoining Gulf States. Its graduates are to be the pastors of our Southern home missionary churches. The Association has doubled its appropriation to this seminary and has great confidence in its future.

CHURCH WORK.

Total additions	1,011
Benevolent contributions	$4,324
Raised for church purposes	$45,548

Our colored Congregational churches are, as a whole, giving evidence of new life. The National Convention of Colored Congregationalists held at Atlanta, Ga., a year ago, promises to make a new epoch in the development of our church work among the colored people. The meetings of the various State Associations have been full of interest; our leading pastors have been active in encouraging their brethren; evangelistic work is regularly carried on in most of the churches. In all this work our general missionary has been everywhere helpful. Our churches for the most part are small and dependent, but they hold bravely on, contending for an intelligent faith and a pure life. Not a few have voluntarily assumed a larger share of their own support, thus relieving our overburdened treasury. Some of them have struggled manfully to pay old debts and to repair their buildings. The churches in Washington, D. C., have been especially courageous and self-sacrificing in debt raising. A commendable effort in behalf of self-support and church extension has been undertaken in Louisiana. An unusual number of new churches have been erected or are in process of erection, usually with the aid of the Church Building Society. A new denominational paper, the "Congregational Index," has been established, with headquarters at Nashville, edited and supported by the colored people.

Church work in the mountains is difficult and sometimes discouraging. Faithful work has been done by earnest pastors who have endured hardness for Christ's sake, and fruit has been gathered. But the field has been undermanned, and several of our pastors have broken down in health. We need more men for this rugged work—brave, able, tireless men, strong to work in the rough mining town or to ride the hard mountain circuit. There is plenty of work for such men, and the harvest is waiting. For "the strength of the hills is His also."

Both the schools and the churches in Porto Rico have experienced rather radical changes during the year. The immense advance of the government school work, with its adequate financial support, has seemed to make unnecessary some parts of our mission school service. The church and school work at Lares will now be transferred to the charge of the Presbyterian board which has a number of other missions surrounding that locality. The increasing demands in the eastern part of the island, which was specially assigned to the Congregationalists in the interdenominational arrangements of comity, will necessitate an increase of our mission force. The school at Santurce has been carried forward with earnestness and fidelity and will be continued. Our missionary at Humacao, who has done such large service through all that part of the country, has found it necessary to resign his work on account of considerations of health in his family. Another missionary, of experience in Spanish-speaking countries, will soon take up the service. At Fajardo both the church and the school work has been continued. There is great need of reinforcements in order to adequately care for our out-stations. The long legal difficulties in securing a lot have been met and an edifice adequate to the needs of our enlarged congregations is being erected by the Church Building Society.

The central school at Santee, Nebraska, has continued its work with 111 resident pupils and 197 correspondence pupils. The local scholars range from seven to twenty-five years of age, and from the primary to the high school grades. Half of each day is devoted to industrial training, in farming, stock raising, blacksmithing and carpentry for the boys, and in cooking, garment making and other domestic work for the girls. Among the Dakotas there are now 2,500 Christian church members. A large majority of the pastors and church leaders have been educated at Santee. These native Christians during the last eight years have raised nearly $20,000 for work among their own people. The great need which Santee is meeting is that of native Christian leaders.

At Oahe, South Dakota, the school, with the usual number of teachers, has been faithfully maintained during the school year with an attendance of thirteen pupils. It has been concluded not to continue school work in Oahe during the coming year. The extensive mission service in the Cheyenne River Reservation, South Dakota, has received constant and efficient care, and two new churches have been organized. It should be increased by the employment of, at least, two additional women missionaries, if means for their support can be furnished.

In the Standing Rock Reservation missions, in the Dakotas, the people are having a very hard time, there being much sickness and many deaths. Many of the Indians with their families, are doing their best to secure sustenance by their own industry, but there is much of poverty and hunger. A great deal of suffering is reported as existing among the old people, their rations being so small that they are hungry all the time. The Indians go about from place to place to get work, but they are in camps and not in their own homes. This increases the labor of the missionaries. But every endeavor is used to conserve the results which have been achieved. Recent reports show that, on account of there being no rain for a long time, the people have raised no crops and are in almost entire destitution. It did not seem as if they could endure the hardship of their condition much longer. The large Government school at Grand River, South Dakota, opened this year with an increased number of Congregational pupils and our missionary service is faithfully carried on among them in accordance with the Government rules.

The school work at Fort Berthold has been maintained through the year with an attendance of twenty-four scholars, under somewhat adverse conditions, and will not be carried on next year. It has always been a part of the mission work to help the people in their sicknesses and diseases. In the school during the year we have been able to provide some hospital facilities for those who were sick, and last year a nurse was employed a part of the time, and care and instruction given to some of the weaker and more sickly children. This is a service of great need, for these children often outgrow disease, but not having been admitted to the Government schools, they are left without the training and knowledge which their physical lack makes most essential to them. It is possible that our missionaries may be able to enter more actively into hospital and educational service in behalf of these children. A woman missionary worker, who has completed three years' training and has had experience as a nurse, is to take up this service.

Our reports from the Montana mission among the Crows, indicate that there is a good deal of moving about among the Indians as they abandon their old allotments and take up new ones. The new conditions are very encouraging. The old camps, which were nurseries of superstition and vice, are being broken up and little homes are rising constantly for the separate families. This year the Indians have hay and garden produce for sale, and there are signs of activity and progress everywhere throughout the work. The great irrigation plant is in full operation and will enable the industrious Indians to support themselves and secure property to an extent which was impossible under the old arid conditions of climate.

In the Cheyenne and Arapahoe mission of Oklahoma, there has been great improvement in the number of Indians who attended the Sunday-school, and some very hopeful services have been held in the camps. The general attitude of the boys and girls towards the missionaries is most encouraging. They are taking more interest than they have before, and it is expected that the next school year will chronicle a fuller spiritual development than has been known previously, especially among the Arapahoes. Both of the large government schools are regularly visited, and mission work is being successfully conducted among the pupils.

The Skokomish mission in Washington has been carried forward with the same incessant industry as in former years. Besides the work at Skokomish, services are carried on in eight different out-stations, some of which are widely separated and require a good deal of travel by boat or horseback. Sunday-schools are regularly maintained on the Sundays when our missionary cannot be present for preaching services. The last report gives an aggregate attendance of over 250 at these schools.

In Alaska the work has been of fluctuating character. We have reports, especially from those who have visited the mission, as to the good results which have been achieved in elevating the character of the people. One observer noted that the Eskimos of Cape Prince of Wales could readily be distinguished from those of other tribes by their comparative cleanliness, self-respect and moral qualities. The Government is now building a new schoolhouse, and has introduced a most excellent teacher into its educational work. It has been found necessary to make somewhat radical changes, but it is hoped that the results of long and faithful missionary endeavor will be conserved by continuance of steady progress among the people. Already there have been many assignments to individual ownership from the reindeer herd, which is now the largest on the coast. It is expected that this herd will be of great use in supplying the needs of the Eskimos of other regions through the transfer of deer to the government and its assignment of herds among other communities.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE MISSIONS.

STATISTICS.

Number of missions	20
Whole number of workers, (white, 39; Chinese and Japanese, 22)	61
Number of pupils in schools	1,962
Number giving evidence of having been converted	180
Chinese Church members	100

The most noteworthy incident of the year in our Chinese work has been the organization of the first Congregational Chinese church in this country, with about one hundred members. The Christians uniting for the formation of this church had previously been members of the Bethany Church of San Francisco. It seemed best to them to organize independently now and have their own church services at the mission house in San Francisco.

Recent estimates make the Japanese population in California to be about 10,000 in number. The work already organized among the Chinese can, with very little added expense, take on work in behalf of the Japanese. In most of the fields which we occupy, one mission house and one teacher would do the work for pupils of both nations. We are informed that our Chinese Christians not only welcome the Japanese, but are ready to go out and invite them in.

Applications are coming in from the Japanese for mission work. In one case nine of the applicants were members of the Kumaii churches in Japan. One of them is already well fitted to become their leader, pastor and our missionary helper. There is a surprising growth in the Japanese mission in San Francisco, calling urgently for a considerable enlargement of the mission house.

An effort has been inaugurated for the building of a Japanese mission house at Los Angeles. A Christian Japanese there writes us that there are fifteen hundred of his countrymen now in the city. He says they long to learn something about American civilization and "the Christ religion." If a structure, containing fifty or sixty rooms, could but be opened, the rooms would be filled with those who could pay an adequate rental; and this Japanese Christian feels sure that more work could be done in their behalf in this than in any other possible way.

FINANCIAL.

The receipts for current work have been $325,478.38, and the expenditures have been $373,981.54.

At the last annual meeting held in Cleveland, Ohio, the hope was expressed that the donations would be increased by at least 20 per cent. We regret, however, that this hope has not been realized.

The expenditures for current work were $11,663.81 more than last year. These expenditures were to meet emergencies of vital importance in maintaining the work.

The debt of the Association on the current year is $43,453.16, which, with the charging off of securities of $5,050.00 received from an estate and credited last year, but now of no definite value, and the carrying over the debt of the previous year of $19,414.00, makes the debt showing $67,917.16.

In view of this indebtedness, the Committee has felt compelled to make a considerable reduction in its appropriations for the coming year. It does not feel justified in making appropriations from year to year in excess of reasonable expectation of receipts from the churches.

The Reserve Legacy Plan assures to the Association a fairly uniform amount of from ninety to one hundred thousand dollars. The receipts from Income and from Tuition and from the Slater Fund do not vary much from year to year. The donations, therefore, are the determining factor in making appropriations. It is hoped by your Committee that during the coming year the support will be largely increased and the debt disappear.

In addition to current receipts, there has been paid to the Association from the Estate of Mrs. Julia E. Brick, $75,426.76 and credited as interest to replace amount advanced $4,000.00, making a total on the year for the Joseph K. Brick School Fund of $79,426.76. There have also been received the following amounts for Endowment Funds:

The Eleanor Gaylord Upson Scholarship Fund, (income for Tougaloo University Scholarship)	$2,000.00
Albert Wentworth Fund	950.00
Mary W. Thompson Fund	500.00

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

Through this department Women's Societies have been kept informed of the work and its needs. Of the thirty-six Women's Organizations contributing, fifteen have assumed the full support of from one to ten missionaries each, thus sustaining forty-five missionaries. Aid has also been given in scholarships and contributions to the general work. It is gratifying to report as received through Women's State Organizations from various sources, and from local societies, $29,001.91.

AMONG OUR CONSTITUENTS.

The methods adopted to maintain and increase the interest among the constituents of the Association are worthy of mention that the friends of this great work may know what is being done along these lines.

LITERATURE.

The preparation of missionary literature demands most careful consideration and study. There is an increasing demand for such literature. "The American Missionary" reaches a considerable number of our constituents. "Congregational Work," in which this Association controls one department, reaches quite another and distinct class of readers from those to whom the magazine goes. These two periodicals prove themselves of much value in the development of deeper interest and in stimulating larger gifts.

But these two regularly published periodicals do not reach all of those who are or who should be interested in the work lying within the field of this Association. Indeed, the demand for occasional literature, the republication of strong papers containing the discussion of the larger problems involved in the work of this Association, is rapidly increasing. The table below illustrates this:

LEAFLETS CIRCULATED DURING THE YEAR.

Negro	101,500
Highlanders	30,500
Indian	20,000
Porto Rican	12,500
Chinese	4,500
Alaskan	5,500
Christian Endeavor	1,000

It will be seen that there has been special interest during the year in the Negro work and in that among the American Highlanders. These leaflets are sent out almost entirely upon request from churches or other organizations or from individuals. Several patriotic, literary or social clubs have requested leaflets published by the Association discussing these national problems. During the year just closing several papers of unusual importance have been issued. The demand has been so great for some of these that we have found it necessary to issue three or four editions of the same paper. This is certainly a very exceptional and interesting feature of missionary literature. It lays at rest the oft-repeated falsehood that people generally are not interested in missionary information. We rejoice in the increasing appreciation of this literature, but more in the evidence of broadening interest in the great Christian and national problems discussed in these leaflets and which lie within the field of this Association.

Special Study Leaflets, which were first issued three years ago, have proved of much value. Study Classes have been organized in churches and Sunday-schools to a considerable extent. It is an important and interesting movement, and promises for the future an increase of intelligent interest in these missionary problems and work. Institutes for mission study have held their place among our young people during the year.

SPEAKERS AND CAMPAIGNS.

There seems to be a growing habit among the pastors of our Congregational churches to present personally in sermons before their own people the missionary interests of the denomination maintained through the various missionary organizations. Your committee would especially commend this method. A pastor stands in such relationship to his people, holding their esteem and confidence, that his public approval and appeal for the missionary work of this Association have unusual significance and value.

We would recognize the general interest on the part of the State Associations in the work of this Association. Many of these important bodies have invited a representative of this work and given him a large and generous hearing on their platform. Every missionary cause depends largely upon such hearing. Local Conferences have also in very many instances given a place to the interests of this work.

We detect a growing interest in the specific and special among the constituency of the Association. Missionaries from the field, representing the needs of their own branch of work, have received cordial welcome and response. We believe that this is a proper tendency.

The concrete and individual not only appeals with peculiar power to those who hear the message, but gives permanent impressiveness to the larger work of which this particular is only a part. On the other hand, it must always be borne in mind that if that which provides for the enlargement and development of a special work be taken from the income of the Association as a whole, it brings embarrassment and necessary retrenchment in some other field. The regular collection of the church to the regular work of the Association coming straight into the treasury is essential in order to continue this great work.

We especially recognize the interest of the young people in Sunday-schools, Endeavor Societies and Missionary Clubs as expressed in many ways during the year. Many individuals also have given generously.

RESULTS AND OUTLOOK.

For five years there had been a steady increase in donations until this year just closing. During this year the receipts from donations have fallen off. We do not believe that this indicates any lack of interest on the part of our constituency in this important work. Other causes have doubtless contributed to this unfortunate condition. That it is to be deeply regretted, however, none can question. That it may be overcome during the coming year is certainly possible. Your committee would appeal to every Congregational church in America to provide at least one collection during the year for the American Missionary Association. Even though in some cases this must necessarily be a small collection, it would mean great things in the aggregate. The common interests of our common country, as well as the progress of the Kingdom of God, accentuate the claims that this Association has upon the Christian patriots of our land.

Obituaries.

Miss Amelia L. Ferris. We are pained to record the death of a veteran, beloved and honored teacher of the South, Miss Amelia L. Ferris. Upon graduation at Oberlin, June, 1874, she went at once into the South, beginning at Chattanooga. After a few years she was transferred to the Storrs School at Atlanta, and a few years after that to the Williamsburg, Ky., Academy, until she had come through her twenty-eighth year, with the loss of only one day in the schoolroom. She was a great-granddaughter of Daniel Newcomb, a Supreme Judge in New Hampshire, and daughter of Rev. Lyman B. Ferris, and sister of Rev. W L. Ferris, D.D., of Wheaton, Ill. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

Miss Marie Pierce. Our hearts have been saddened by intelligence of the death of Miss Marie Pierce, one of our faithful teachers of last year. Miss Pierce was born in Wisconsin in 1872, and with her parents removed to Nebraska in 1884. She had been a member of the Congregational Church since childhood. In April, in Dorchester Academy, McIntosh, Ga., she was taken ill and returned to her home in May. After a long, wearisome illness, marked "by tender consideration for others and hopeful, courageous endurance," she passed away, September 23d. Miss Pierce was a faithful and conscientious teacher, careful to perform every duty to the uttermost. Her constant aim seemed to be to do good. She was always at her place in matters relating to the church, Sunday-school or any religious work. She was also a genial companion, and held in high regard by us all, and in her death Dorchester Academy has lost a faithful Christian worker and a greatly esteemed friend.

Mr. B. D. Rowlee. The Association and school at Beaufort, N. C., were alike afflicted in the death of the Principal of Washburn Seminary, Mr. B. D. Rowlee, at Beaufort. Mr. Rowlee has been in the service of the American Missionary Association for nine years. For two years he was principal of the school at Orange Park. Subsequently, Mr. Rowlee was appointed at Beaufort, where he was the successful principal seven years. He entered upon his work with his accustomed earnestness and fidelity in September, and taught until Friday, October 30th. On Sunday evening, November 1st, after he had passed the day about his home and led in devotions in the evening, he suddenly passed away. Mr. Rowlee had won the confidence of the entire community at Beaufort, and will be greatly mourned by all. His sincere Christian faith, his unceasing fidelity, his consecration to the work, and his success in it, will long be remembered.

Rev. Elijah Horr, D.D. In the death of Dr. Elijah Horr the American Missionary Association loses one of its most honored and valued members of the Executive Committee. Dr. Horr was elected a member of the Executive Committee at Hartford in October, 1892, and has been re-elected at successive annual meetings. In all these eleven and one-half years Dr Horr has served the Association with a most regular attendance at its meetings and with a singular fidelity and devotion to the interests which the American Missionary Association has in charge. His valuable experience, together with his earnest sincerity, won for him the confidence and esteem of his associates. Dr. Horr was born in western New York and was educated at Hamilton College and Boston University. He came into the Congregational denomination after a successful period of ministry in the Methodist Church, and soon established the same confidence in his new connection that he had in his former ones. As a faithful and beloved pastor he will be greatly missed by those who knew him in this relation, and all the members of the Executive Committee and officers of the Association will greatly mourn his absence from their councils.

Miss Esther A. Warner went to Roanoke Island in 1866 as an industrial teacher under the American Missionary Association. Transferred to Gregory Normal Institute, Wilmington, N. C., she continued there a faithful and devoted teacher until 1887. When failing strength compelled her to leave her much-loved field, she did not release her interest in her work with her departure. By correspondence with former pupils, generous gifts for their aid, and by interesting all who came under her influence, she continued to be an American Missionary Association missionary to the end of her more than fourscore years.

Prof. Frederick Augustus Chase, for over thirty-one years Professor of Science in Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., passed away April 3d, at the age of 71 years. He will be mourned by a host of friends. Professor Chase was born January 29, 1833, in Northville, New York. His grandfather, Captain Henry Chase, was from Little Compton, R. I., and moved to Cayuga County, N. Y., where he purchased a farm of 300 acres. On this farm Frederick was born and spent nearly one-third of his life. At the age of fourteen he began to attend school at Genoa Academy. With an unusual thirst for knowledge he applied himself to his studies with great diligence. In the fall of 1857 he entered Michigan University. In the fall of 1860 he entered Auburn Theological Seminary, Auburn, N. Y. Finishing his course here in the spring of 1863, he was married the following August, and immediately entered the ministry.

His first pastorate was in Parishville, N. Y. His next was in Lyndonville, N. Y.; but after the second winter he decided to teach. For two years he had charge of Lyons Female Academy, in Lyons, Ia., which position he held until he was called to Fisk University in the fall of 1872. Professor Chase began his work as teacher of science when the school was located in the old "Soldiers' Barracks," just west of the old Church Street depot.

His work in Fisk University was earnest and faithful. He was a man of few vacations. He took a personal interest in all his students, and not a few will bear witness to being helped by his kind advice and warnings. He was generous; he gave all, for he gave himself.

Rev. J. H. H. Sengstacke.—In the death of Rev. J. H. H. Sengstacke the Association loses an earnest, patient and faithful minister. He was born in Savannah, Ga., of a German father and a colored mother, who were duly married. The mother died before the Civil War; and the father, fearing that his children might be enslaved should the South succeed, returned to Germany, taking his two children—a son and a daughter—with him, where the latter still lives. The son was confirmed in the Lutheran Church in Germany, and was well educated in that country. He spoke four languages—German, English, French and Spanish. After traveling in Java, India, the Philippines, England and Porto Rico, upon the death of his father he returned to the land of his birth to secure the property his father left. A long suit against the executor consumed most of it. Meanwhile he found employment as a teacher in Savannah, but being deeply interested in the welfare of the race with which he was identified, he began to preach. Becoming acquainted with the American Missionary Association through its school at Beach Institute, in Savannah, a church was planted at Woodville, near Savannah, of which he was pastor for thirty years until he died. He was the father of five children and adopted two. Three of his children were graduated at Beach Institute and two from the State College. One studied at Atlanta University and in the Theological Department of Talladega College. Mr. Sengstacke did not have an easy life, but it was a devoted and useful one of faithful service.

ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

The year just closed brings us to the twenty-seventh anniversary of the introduction by the American Missionary Association of a department of Woman's Work. The first organized work of women in aid to this Association began in 1877 when women of eastern Michigan united in becoming responsible for the support of a missionary to the Freedmen. This was followed speedily by similar movements in other states, and the American Missionary Association responded with quick appreciation, publicly recognizing the movement in its Annual Report of the year 1877-78 under a section "Woman's Work for Women." The next year opportunity was given for a Woman's Meeting, in connection with the Annual Meeting of the Association held at Chicago, and this plan of a Woman's Session has continued to the present time. When four years later in 1883 a special department of correspondence became necessary and the Bureau of Woman's Work was announced, organized work had developed in four states in aid of the A. M. A., and the tendency toward Women's State Home Missionary Unions planned to co-operate with all the National Societies was already apparent. These Women's State Unions now number thirty-eight and are giving substantial assistance in the field of the American Missionary Association for the colored people and white of the South, the Indians, Eskimos, Chinese and Porto Ricans. The peculiar conditions in these fields have always stirred the sympathy of women, and enlisted their aid.

Each year has chronicled some measure of success. If we have not always made a strong pull, we have pulled all together and God has blessed the effort. It is with gratitude that at this close of another year we bring report of some advance in contributions through Women's Organizations. It would have been grievous to show loss; it would have been discouraging to halt merely holding our own; we thank God and contributing friends for the gain. The Association has received through Women's State Organizations and from local societies contributing directly to the A. M. A. treasury or to the mission field, $29,001.91. Fifteen of the Women's State Unions have so far developed their benevolences as to have assumed in the field of the

A. M. A. the full support of from one to ten missionaries, thus sustaining during the last year forty-five missionaries besides contributing for scholarships and for the general work. Box help has increased in amount and value, 614 boxes having been sent to different parts of this field during the year. With 68 mission homes and dormitories in which bedding and napery must be replenished annually, with over 250 churches and many more Sunday-schools among people of great poverty, it will be readily seen that the box aid might be doubled without danger of over-supply. Yet we would invite this aid not as a substitute for, but rather supplementary to cash contributions for the support of missions.

The forty-five missionaries representing contributing societies have faithfully written of their respective fields, and these letters have been circulated periodically to auxiliaries. If home interest has been quickened thereby, so also have the missionaries been helped by closer touch with Christian hearts at home. These letters have been written in response only to pledges of support. As the representatives of their supporters the writers report the progress of the work with which they are connected.

Some of the missionary assignments to Women's Societies have been of long standing. For more than twenty years the Vermont Union has supported teachers in McIntosh, Ga.; Massachusetts and Rhode Island in Cotton Valley, Alabama; the Connecticut Union in Thomasville, Ga.; Iowa in Savannah, Ga.; New York in King's Mountain, N. C.; Ohio in Pleasant Hill, Tenn. These all, and other Unions, have other work in this varied A. M. A. field, and have become thoroughly identified with particular mission stations, the tendency being toward permanency in aid to the mission, though missionary representatives change.

New and interesting leaflets issued by the Association during the year have been circulated freely, largely in response to special request. This may account for the unusual call also for mite boxes which have been furnished without charge except for postage. Contributions follow information. If more good seed of information were carefully sown, watched and tended with some weeding out of appeals for which we are less responsible than for the work of our great missionary societies, our American Missionary Association and sister societies of the Congregational Church would doubtless be kept free from debt and sent on their way rejoicing. Leaders of our Women's Unions realize the importance of literature, and use it and the missionary magazines liberally. One such writes, "The time is past—if there ever was such a time—when any intelligent woman can afford to be ignorant of the needs of this great country and the work that is being done. The relation between the great events in the world and the missionary operations is very close. Intelligence in missionary work cannot be overestimated and liberality will follow intelligence."

To the work accomplished by the 475 women missionaries in the field of the Association we may not give space in this Report. It may be read of both plainly and "between the lines" in the Annual Report of the Executive Committee which gives a survey of the year. It has been in the midst of great and crowding opportunities for practical Christian work, applying the corrective power of the Gospel to the common everyday lives of the people needing help. Our missionaries have been busy teaching the Gospel of books, of work, of love, with marvelous results that words cannot describe.

But we give space to a statement of needs that press upon the American Missionary Association. The field work suffers from poverty of supplies. The missionary schools are too meagerly equipped; re-enforcements of teachers are needed but cannot be had until the Association is so liberally supported as to provide for them. Four hundred dollars will support a missionary teacher for one year.

Student aid is needed for both Highlanders and colored pupils, and especially in boarding-schools, is absolutely necessary for many of the brightest and most worthy of these young people if they are to be prepared for useful work and lives of influence. Fifty dollars a school year, supplemented by what the pupil can do for himself, will provide for his education.

Buildings are too limited in their accommodations. Hundreds of boys and girls are being turned away for lack of room. Sometimes a gift of $500 to $1,000 will open the way for greatly needed enlargement. There is a chance for stewards of larger holdings to render lasting and inestimable help in the advancement of this work. Your investment of money in a dormitory, school building, domestic science cottage or addition to the already overcrowded dormitory will give opportunity for larger, fuller, truer life to hundreds of young people who otherwise will remain sitting in darkness.

Donations now will bring present and greatly needed relief. Donations by "Conditional Gift" are also very helpful. The system of Conditional Gifts—gifts on which the Association will pay an annual sum during life to the donor—finds great favor with women, relieving them of many an anxiety about investments. Their investment placed in the missionary treasury, brings to them an assured income at reasonable rate during lifetime, and is released to the missionary work when the donor passes to her heavenly reward.

One of the leaders in our Unions writes, "We are as responsible morally for the growth of the work we send our missionaries to do as we are for their personal support, and every opportunity that comes to them there calls for loyalty here." Shall we show our loyalty to the growing pressing needs of this field of the American Missionary Association now and during this new year? Let us pledge ourselves to increase our own offerings for the current work for relief from its embarrassing limitations through debt; and then by prayer and effort let us seek to increase the number of givers.

We suggest as our motto for the year, Larger personal gifts, more givers.

"What's done for earth fails by and by;
What's done for God can never die;
What's done for God is placed on high,
'Tis treasured in eternity.

AUDITORS' CERTIFICATE.

We have employed Frederick C. Manvel, Certified Public Accountant of the State of New York, to examine the books and accounts of H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer of the American Missionary Association, for the year ending September 30th, 1904, and herewith submit his statement of the results of his work as a part of our report.

We have also made a careful examination of all Bonds and other securities held by the Association and find the same to agree with the records in the books and balance sheet of same date.

The Treasurer's Bond was submitted to us and found to be in order.

EDWIN H. BAKER,
JOHN E. LEECH,
Auditors.

New York, October 8th, 1904.

MR. EDWIN H. BAKER, } Auditors.
MR. JOHN E. LEECH, }

GENTLEMEN:

The records of the financial transactions for the year ending September 30th, 1904, as contained in the Treasurer's accounts, have had my careful examination and been found to be correct as stated and properly vouched.

In making the audit I have proved and verified the footings, postings and balances in the different books and compared the cancelled checks with the entries in the cash book. I also compared the totals of the cash book with the entries in the Monthly Report Book from which the figures for the Annual Report are assembled, including those of the receipts as published in the American Missionary.

I have verified the balances in the banks and Trust Companies by their certificates, which have agreed with the Treasurer's books. I compared the figures in the Trial Balance Sheet with those in the General Ledger and in the statements of investments, which were verified by a personal examination of the securites by the Committee in which I assisted.

I find the expenditures this year from the current fund account exceeded the receipts by $48,513.16, by which the debtor balance of last year, $19,414.00, is increased to $67,917.16.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK C. MANVEL,
Certified Public Accountant of State of New York.

REPORT OF THE EASTERN DISTRICT—1903-1904.

G. H. GUTTERSON, DISTRICT SECRETARY.

For convenience in administration the collecting field of the A. M. A. is divided into several districts, one of which is called the Eastern District. This embraces the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

These five states contain 1,307 churches. Of these 1,307 churches there are three having over one thousand members, fifty having over five hundred, 381 having between fifty and one hundred members, and 322 with only fifty members or less.

The number of churches in this district calling for Home Missionary aid is increasing from year to year. These 1,307 churches have a membership of 187,819, but 35,217 are absentees, hence the resident membership is 152,602.

The total gifts from these churches in the Eastern District, including legacies, according to the Year Book of 1904, from which all these statistics are taken, was $1,061,588. The total home expenses of these same churches amounted for the same period to $2,511,813.

The contributions for benevolent purposes fall far short of being even one-half of the running expenses for a given year.

The A. M. A. received in donations from the living, from the churches in the Eastern District, $52,564. It is interesting to note that the total of legacies and donations from all our churches for the period under consideration amounted to $3,026,417, while the home expenses for the same period were $7,954,566.

Out of the grand total given for benevolent purposes by the living through the whole country, namely, $2,088,967, the denominational societies receive $1,399,635, while the gifts to other objects are $689,332. This last fact may account, to some extent, at least, for the large deficiency in the treasuries of three of our denominational societies. Is it fair play to leave these boards, for which the denomination is directly responsible, and whose work and administration is, in the last analysis, under the complete control of the denomination, to struggle along under the burden of debt while we help these other causes, some of which, at least, have not very much claim upon us?

Ought we not to care for our own first?

The work of presenting the claims of the A. M. A. before the churches, conferences and other organizations in the Eastern District falls upon two persons in the Boston office, who, as usual, have received the hearty and affectionate welcome of pastors and people. It is a privilege to go into the homes of the ministers and laymen and to meet them in public gatherings. This office desires to return cordial thanks for all the hospitality and many kindnesses shown during the year by pastors and friends.

Certainly one who travels from church to church feels impressed with the large amount of brave and faithful work being done by the ministers in their churches and parishes, often in the midst of obstacles and discouragements, arising from conditions for which no one is directly responsible.

During the year valuable service has been rendered by Rev. Spencer Snell, of Talladega, Ala., and by William Pickens, a recent graduate of Yale, and one of our own Talladega boys. We also welcome from time to time college presidents and professors from the South.

Some of the details of the work are as follows:

Churches visited, 23 of which are new	144
State Associations and Conferences	43
C. E. Societies	15
Sunday Schools	47
Ministers' Meetings	2
Also Ladies' Meetings and Clubs, in all public addresses	372

REPORT OF THE WESTERN DISTRICT—1903-1904.

WILLIAM L. TENNEY, DISTRICT SECRETARY.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

In looking over the work in this district during the last year, two evident reasons for encouragement appear:—

First—Non-contributing churches have responded to the special appeals made to them to share in the work of this Association to such an extent as to show a decided increase in the number of churches contributing.

Second—There has been a healthful increase in the amounts contributed by the churches of the District. Many pastors and churches are raising the question as to whether the great work of the Association has received its fitting proportion of the attention and offerings of their people. The many-sided character of our work is making its appeal to many in our churches who have hitherto, for some reason, hard to understand, looked upon the training of some of the independent schools in the South as more practical than that afforded in our own schools.

To these evident reasons for encouragement the Secretary must voice his personal reason for gratitude in the cordial spirit of welcome which has been shown him by both pastors and churches. He has not been treated as one who was representing an outside organization, but has usually been introduced as "one will speak to us of our work for the needy and backward races."

THE SECRETARY'S EMPLOYMENT OF TIME AND METHODS.

The Secretary has not been free to take a vacation this year. The calls for his service which he has been compelled to reject have been so many that he has accepted invitations for every Sunday in the year except the first. He has addressed State and Local Associations in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota and Kansas, and has conducted speaking tours in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and South Dakota.

During seven months of the year he has been traveling in the field. The presence of his loved and honored predecessor, Secretary Emeritus Roy, in the office has rendered such protracted absence possible, when otherwise they might not have been wise.

The mails have been used constantly. In additional to the annual letter and the Lincoln Day letter, the Secretary has tried to keep in touch with the churches by sending literature for distribution in connection with the regular offerings and has also sent special information to the individuals in the churches who have evinced interest in our work. Every church in the District has been reached at least three times.

The employment of Rev. Geo. W. Moore, Principal A. S. Hill, William Pickens and Mrs. Ida Vose Woodbury in the District, has given hearty satisfaction to the churches and their splendid service has been most useful to the Association.

From time to time, Dr. Roy has been heard by the churches, who will always revere him, and his message still has the old power.

Pastors and churches in the Western District are praying for a revival of religion. May we not believe that now, as in the time of the ancient prophet, one of the main conditions of such a revival is "bring all the tithes into the storehouse?"

No work concerns more directly the spiritual life of the church than that of the great missionary organizations. The sympathy, the prayers and the support of all belong to them if they belong to God.

Race Problems and their Christian Solution.

REV. H. P. DEWEY, D.D.

Delivered at the Annual Meeting, Des Moines, Iowa, October 16, 1904.

"And they went down both into the water."—Acts viii : 38

It seems appropriate and opportune that the fifty-eighth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association should be held in this capital city, because of the historical relations existing between the region hereabouts and three at least of the peoples to whom we extend the helping hand. In the mighty struggle for the liberation of the black man no state bore a more honorable record than the one whose hospitality we are sharing to-night. Indeed, it is said, that at the outset, when the call came for troops, the citizens here were indignant because they were asked to contribute but one regiment. Again, this commonwealth is a very rich portion of that vast territory obtained from Napoleon for a song, the purchase of which is being celebrated with no little self-congratulation in a neighboring city. If it be asked what pertinence that fact has in this connection, let it be remembered that the Highlanders—in the persons of their forefathers—more than a hundred years ago, under the lead of the Boones and the Seviers and the Clarkes, penetrating the goodly land bounded by the Cumberland and the Ohio and the Tennessee, and seeing the advantage of unrestricted traffic through the Father of Waters, and catching an alluring vision of the mighty domain beyond, were in a sense the first promoters of the shrewd and gigantic sale. The only tarnish upon their sagacity and courage, the blemish also upon the Government which was behind them, was, that as the bargain was struck, they were not very mindful of the rights of those who held the original title to the land,—conduct quite in contrast with their later refusal to swing the lash upon the back of a slave and with all their noble loyalty to the Union cause. Again, as the wavering longitudinal line of Indian tribes, stretching from Canada to the Gulf, was pushed from the Atlantic far to the West, it was in this vicinity that the pursued made one of their most valiant stands against the pursuers. When, therefore, we think of Keokuk, possessed of many manly qualities, fervent and persuasive in speech, and loyal to the last to the hand that smote him; or when we think of Blackhawk, who, years after the vain struggle had ceased, came yonder to Rock Island, and as he brooded over the wrongs of his people and the cause that was lost forever, burst into passionate tears; or when we think of the Sacs and Foxes who were persuaded from their homes in Illinois by dint of specious reasoning and cheap money and bad whiskey and the ever final and clinching argument of the rifle, and taking their way to this western shore of the Mississippi, threw themselves wearily and sadly upon the bosom of the prairie, and exclaimed, "Iowa!" meaning "Here we find rest!"—when we thus remind ourselves, it seems very fitting that the best friends the Indian has to-day should gather here to counsel how they may help him realize the hope long deferred and secure to him the higher rights of his humanity.

As we contemplate the work of this Association, we find that it has encouragements and embarrassments as does every other line of missionary endeavor we pursue. It is peculiarly true, however, that some of the most signal encouragements and some of the most disheartening embarrassments attending this work lie in the personal natures of the beneficiaries. It is a distinct gain that in our endeavors for three of these peoples we are met and aided at the outset by their own good opinion of themselves. The Indian may recognize that his numbers are diminishing; he may think of himself as caught in the eddy of an on-rushing stream; but he has no apology to make for being an Indian, and if he is even compelled to feel that he is the last surviving remnant of his race, the pride of a Pontiac or of a Tecumseh will still throb in his heart. The Chinaman pushes his way complacently, determinedly, asking no favors, serene in the consciousness of the national stability behind him which has remained unshaken for thousands of years. The Highlander, American of Americans, has an inherent strength of character like unto the strength of the hills among which he lives, he has a spirit of freedom in his soul like unto the mountain air which he breathes; when he is virtuous he is staunch and unbending like one of his Cumberland pines, and in his vices, even in his moonshining, as one has described him, he is quite capable of "making his own copper still, growing his own corn, and brewing his own 'licker.'" But the Negro presents a different type. Docile, submissive, unassertive, held in the grip of the inertia of the long schooling of dependency and improvidence, he finds it difficult to believe that his soul, now reborn to a new lease of life but so long under the dominion of others, is property of which he has entire control. Moreover, he presents an embarrassment, as we attempt to elevate him, which we meet in our dealings with other races of color, but which in his case is especially formidable. It lies in the force operating very widely to-day and becoming more and more in evidence in many quarters of the globe. We see it here in our southern states more flagrantly perhaps than elsewhere: but there it is in South Africa, estranging the Briton and the Boer from the Kaffir and the Zulu. There it is in the British Isles, ever ready to disturb the balances between Celt and Saxon. There it is in Western Europe, glaring in the eyes of Teuton and Latin as they jealously keep vigil over Alsace and Lorraine. There it is in the Balkan Peninsula, fanning the enmity between Slav and Turk and giving an added complexity to the issues that portend from the situation charged with volcanic possibilities. And there it is in the Far East, every hour bringing to whiter heat the ferocious passions and making more deadly and awful in effect the terrible enginery employed, as Causacian and Mongolian, blonde faced Russian and saffron faced Jap continue in the titanic struggle that is horrifying the world. Whatever arbitration may achieve through Hague tribunals and peace congresses, through fervent petitions to presidents and mikados and czars attesting that the nobler soul of Christendom is thoroughly sick of war, even though it secure the day when the chariot and battle bow shall entirely be cut off from Ephraim and Jerusalem, there will still remain to it the more delicate and difficult task of reconciling the antipathies which are nursed, if they are not created, by differing hues of complexion and unlike qualities of blood.

Recognizing this element of seriousness, it is very natural that at such a time as this we should address our thought particularly to that department of our work which concerns the elevation of the Negro people. It may be thought that in view of the many and divergent views expressed, often exciting not a little of heated feeling, it would be wise for the friends of this Association to go quietly about their appointed business and keep their opinions to themselves. I can but think, however, that it is one of the happy auguries of the time that so much is being said and said so openly and without reserve.

Nor could the question be remanded to silence, if we would thus dispose of it. The Negro is here to stay. However much others, more favored at the top of the social ladder, may incline to race suicide, he evinces no tendency to fall into that sin. It is true that he increases less rapidly than does his white neighbor, but this is because of his larger death rate; and when, heeding the advice of President Eliot, given the other day at a colored men's dinner, he raises up from his own number skilled physicians, this disproportion will be reversed. He is more and more of a factor in the industrial situation, an increasingly disturbing element in the relations between capital and labor; however restricted he may be in franchise, he enters, sentimentally at least, as a power into every presidential contest; and morally, his 50 per cent. of ignorance and superstition is a very sensible drag upon the skirts of the Republic.

One of the gratifying phases of the case is that the Negro himself is at last stating a solution of the problem. Of all the spectacles in the world to-day, of all the scenes in history, there is nothing more dramatically interesting than the picture of the colored race making the discovery of its long buried self. For a while dazed and confused by the liberty into which it was thrust and which it knew not how to use, stupefied by the anodyne of bondage still lingering in its blood, it now is beginning to stir from its lethargy and to emerge from its bewilderment. Wendell Phillips looked upon the arms of a southern state, representing a Negro asleep upon a bale of cotton, and after a moment of solemn pondering, he asked: "And what will the people do when the Negro wakes up?" At last, the dawn is beginning to break, and he who has been asleep, or groping blindly in the night, is coming forth into the morning. The light of the new day is upon his face and its cheer is in his heart.

It is a picture infinitely pathetic. Someone hearing a singer of rare natural power, remarked: "Now, if she could only be made to suffer!" The soul quality sometimes missing in a musical artist is seldom absent in the life melodies and harmonies of the Negro people. The reason that their orators often speak with such consummate and overwhelming eloquence, is not, I think, that the Great Bestower has allowed them a special portion of the divine afflatus, but rather that they utter themselves, often almost unconsciously, out of a great experience. The plaintive note heard in the voice is, as Dunbar so touchingly says, the song of a bird who knows what it is to beat his wings against the bars. No people so well understand the meaning of the cross, unless it be those exiles wandering over the face of the earth whose fathers nineteen centuries ago gave the symbol to the world, unwittingly converting it from a sign of shame into an emblem of glory. Think what it means to attempt to rise in the world without any inspiring traditions, without any family lineage to hold one up to a standard, without any portraits of ancestors looking down upon one in cheer and admonition. The Indian remembers the valor of many a chieftain; the Chinaman can never forget Confucius; the Highlander feels the inspiration of King's Mountain; the Negro has the knowledge that his roots are struck deep in age long ignominy. Your white boy sets out upon his career with a hundred voices to hail and urge him on. His race is with him, bearing him up in its sympathies and in its achievements as the ocean lifts the ship upon its bosom. The Negro boy begins his ascent with his race, as President Tucker once said in this presence, a drag upon him; yes, the weight of the whole mass he must lift. If he finds some voices to encourage him, there are more voices to sneer and bid him keep his place. All the way up there are those who contest his right to rise; and he knows that if at last he shall succeed in standing upon the higher ranges of attainment he will be in an atmosphere that is chilly indeed. I shall not forget the statement of a Negro lady of much refinement, that her education had separated her from congenial association with those of her own race who had not enjoyed her advantages, and on the other hand had gained her no entrance into the circles of those white people whose elevated tastes she shared. Is there not a cross in such loneliness as that? But if there is dignity in bearing the cross; if it is true, as the Apocalypse declares in the seven-fold refrain, that the better rewards of life are designed for those who overcome, then surely we ought to take off our hats to these sturdy ones who against unparalleled odds have pushed their way; who have climbed often with bleeding fingers and bruised feet, and who have attested in their victories against severest competitions those lines of Kipling which I have somewhere seen quoted in their behalf:

"But there is neither East nor West, border, nor breed, nor birth, When two strong men stand face to face, though they come from the ends of the earth."

An unseemly brawl occurred in Brooklyn the other day in the gray of the morning before the policemen were astir. An unoffending Negro was set upon by three or four ruffianly white men, but as the onslaught proceeded one of the attacking party seemed to be moved by the spirit of fair play, and calling a halt, he advised that they deal one at a time with their victim. When this order of battle was established, the Negro quickly put his assailants to rout. That suggests the ability to improve the "fair chance" which members of the colored race frequently exhibit. And just what does the "fair chance" mean? It signifies, of course, the colored man's liberty to be himself. If he can manoeuvre the farm, dig the mines and run the engine; if he can plead the case and treat the sick; if he can mould his thoughts in forms of exquisite beauty and real power in verse or on canvas; if he can be the statesman and the leader of men—then there must be no hindrance placed to the exercise of his talents. Thus he will be able to hold up his head and to dictate his terms, because thus he will have made himself indispensable. But liberty, which civilization is quite ready—theoretically, at least—to accord almost everywhere to-day, involves something else which civilization is often more reluctant to grant. That something is equality.

Industrial equality—the opportunity to work on fair terms and to enjoy to the fullest the harvest of one's labor.

Educational equality—the opportunity to learn and to appropriate the truth which belongs, like the air, to all. It is to be lamented that some of our constituency are beginning to waiver as to the expediency of giving the Negro the higher education. I am reminded of a discussion which occurred recently in a certain professor's home in which there were two daughters. The question was whether girls should be sent to college. One daughter had already graduated. The other was a possible sub-freshman. If you could know, it was said, what your girl is to do, whether she is to be a breadwinner or to become the mistress of a home, you might better tell how to advise her. In the perplexities of the situation, the professor was of the opinion that inasmuch as you cannot predict the future for your daughter, you must do the very best thing possible for her and equip her in the most elaborate fashion that she may be well prepared for every emergency. Who can tell? She may adopt the state of matrimony, but even then, it is just possible, that she may need a very large fund of knowledge to supplement the deficiencies of her spouse. We must all agree with the distinguished and wise president of Harvard, that there is no educational advantage demanded for the white man which is not equally demanded for the Negro; that if we are to have good primary schools and good grammer schools in either Massachusetts or Alabama, we must have good normal schools and good colleges in which to train the necessary teachers.

Once more, political equality—the opportunity to register, to vote, to make laws, and to administer laws. The Negro cannot justly be debarred from any privilege of citizenship, even from the emoluments of office. We are under the flag; let us take the logic of the ensign. If we do not like that logic, then let us move to Europe. We are committed to the principle of self government, and one of the cardinal elements of that principle is that the governed shall, if they are capable, have the right to become the governors. Our honored Chief Executive is the exponent of the only righteous creed, when he declares that he cannot take the position of closing the door of hope—which he says is the door of opportunity—to any man on account of his race or color.

Yet, once more, social equality; and there is a phantom of dread haunting that suggestion which is wholly fictional. Social equality in the truest meaning of the term means simply that all sorts and conditions of people in this country must live side by side in a spirit of mutual helpfulness and good will. It does not mean amalgamation of the colored race and the white race. That never can be. The eighty-five per cent. of the colored population who have sable countenances will not incline, as time goes on, to transmit more pallor to the faces of their offspring. They will more and more take a pride in the African complexion, which, with the Prince of Morocco pleading his suit before Portia, they will deem "the shadowed livery of the burnished sun." There will be no intrusion of the black man into the privacies of the white man. There will be no obliteration of the classifications of society which lie in the nature of things. I can but think that with the lapse of years the Negro will become more and more distinct. He will be segregated by his own choice. He will desire his own hotels, his own railway cars—and he will have diner and Pullman attached—his own theatres, and his own schools. But what we contend is, that no legislature shall prevent white children and black children from studying together under the same roof if they elect so to do, and that there shall be no criticism from any source if we choose to ask any man of whatsoever color or origin to sit at our table, or to sleep in our spare bed-room. We cannot legislate the social relationships. They are determined by influences more subtle and delicate than those exerted by the state. They are governed by other forces than the volition of man. They are fixed by the laws of nature and of nature's God. And who is the man who is at once the truest aristocrat and the truest democrat? Is he the one whose distinguishing feature is that he has culture or wealth or family connections? No. Rather is he the one who, with or without these accessories, is possessed of the sane mind and the large heart and the honorable conscience and the resolute will. Sooner or later that man must find every door opening to him: he must be laureled and crowned without regard to the accident of his beginnings or of his complexion, for as a Negro singer with prophetic vision has declared:

"The man who is strong to fight his fight,
  And whose will no front can daunt,
If the truth be truth, and the right be right,
  Is the man whom the ages want."

This suggests the ideal some day to be realized, the blessed democracy of the future. We have to confess that the happy consummation seems yet far away. Meanwhile, we should evince the utmost patience and sympathy toward those who do not think that the ideal ever can be attained, who believe that it is wholly impracticable and visionary, and who are animated by a prejudice which has no place in our hearts. Our colored friend, Mr. Moore, tells of losing his hat by theft, while on a railway train, and of being insulted by a white news agent who hailed him as "Old Baldhead." Let our brother be comforted by reflecting that he is in a worthy line of succession. The incident brings to mind a report from a Sunday school teacher who recently asked me to give the correct interpretation of the term, "little children," as applied to those juveniles who, with a like salutation railed at the prophet Elisha in the ancient city of Bethel. The teacher said that a certain lesson paper had declared that the term should be changed to "hoodlums," but that the class had expressed the judgment that such rendering seemed a little over drastic and that the punishment which fell upon the misguided youth was rather too severe. Certain it is, that we should exercise the largest charity toward those who see the situation from their own close and strained relations to it. The problem is one to be reasoned over, not to be fought over. In all our attitude we should make it evident that we feel more than charity, that we have with our southern neighbors a veritable identity of interest.

Let us show in all the efforts we put forth to elevate an unprivileged race, that we are willing to take the brunt of their condition; and not only so, but that we are resolved to stand, both with the black man and with his white neighbor, until together they are lifted out of their trouble, not forgetting the while that we also are of like passions with them.

De Tocqueville tells an incident in his visit made to this country seventy-five years ago, which seems almost like a provision of the work of the American Missionary Association. He drew nigh to a plantation in Florida, and as he sat down on the banks of a creek, he saw three children approach One was an Indian, adorned with barbaric ornaments; the second was a negress; and the third was a white girl, the daughter of the planter. The Indian freely and boldly, yet tenderly, caressed the white child; but the negress sat at her feet timidly and gently trying to gain her notice and excite her favor, while the little mistress, evidently conscious of her superior position, accepted and reciprocated the attentions of both her companions with every mark of fond attachment. Thus three races, says the writer, evinced their respective characteristics and conditions of life, and he feels sure that the interplay of genuine affection among the trio is the force that must be relied upon to inspire and seal a lasting and happy bond among three diverse peoples destined to live in proximity to one another.

Yes, but where shall this affection have its rise? What shall be the influence to create and foster and secure it? Can education be relied upon to establish such friendliness? We cannot forget that it was when France was in a high stage of literary development and sedulous in nurturing all the arts and politeness that the best compliment a great English statesman could pay her was that her vices lost half their viciousness by losing half their grossness. Socrates had a fine notion that if men could only know enough they would be certain to follow the path of wisdom and honor, and Aristotle believed that if sufficient arithmetic could be crowded into a boy's head he would keep to the line of orderly virtue. But the centuries have quite thoroughly disproved these assurances of the ancient sages. Or can we depend upon commercial and industrial facilities to bring in the day of light and peace? When did trade even humanize a people? Did it soften and ennoble the Indians, when the Dutch, led by its impulses, prosecuted their dealings with the red men on Manhattan Island? Did the Phœnicians, those talented and indefatigable buyers and sellers of olden times, improve in character under its stimulus? Nay, as George Adam Smith has pointed out, their merchant ships went far and wide upon the seas while they as a people became so perfidious and corrupt that Isaiah could only adequately stigmatize them by that name which denotes the basest traffic in virtue. Trade, left to its own instinct is but the fierce struggle for existence, the attempt to give survival to the strongest, the doctrine that might makes right.

Or shall we look to political doctrines and expedients to sanctify us and heal every wound? I was somewhat sobered in my optimism recently, to hear one of the foremost diplomatists of the day declare that political life in America is more corrupt than it was twenty-five years ago, and to hear him bring forth as a witness to his statement that it would soon be impossible, if it were not already so, for any man not possessed of great wealth and ready to spend it lavishly for the furtherance of his ambition to aspire to a seat in the United States Senate. No, all these agencies which are efficient instruments in bringing in the fraternal kingdom must utterly fail, must be as dangerous weapons in the hands of children or mad men, if they are not animated and directed and controlled by the deeper impulses of our faith. The truth most requiring to be recognized on all sides just now is rung out in clarion notes by grim old Tolstoi as he presents his awful indictment against his people for the war that is cursing them: "The evil from which men of our time are suffering is produced by the fact that the majority live without that which alone affords a rational guidance for human activity—without religion."

This may seem a commonplace, but there is no truth that we have more forgotten of late, or, at least, so failed to utilize. Can there be any other explanation of the apathy prevailing in the Christian Church? If zeal could be generated by splendid equipments of ecclesiastical and religious machinery, then we ought to be fairly ablaze with enthusiasm. What we are needing above all else is the recovery of some form of real, religious experience. The revival that we should wait for more eagerly than they who wait for the morning is the revival to be heralded by the spiritual note.

It is fairly claimed that much of what the church counsels and enjoins is readily accepted by the world, that what we call the ethics of Christianity is sanctioned by multitudes of people who are never found in the assemblage of the saints. This being so, we may not expect to make a very persuasive appeal in any novelties we have to offer in the humanities and fraternities. We ministers tell our people to be honest, but they find a man next day in business who never darkens the door of the sanctuary, and he is just as earnest in urging the obligation and nobly illustrates it. We tell them to be kind and merciful, but there are many who are indifferent to the house of God, who are quite as obedient to the Golden Rule as are any of those who frequent the place of prayer. We tell them to be pure, but all more decent society exalts the canons of the seventh commandment, and though it does not always ostracise the offender, in its heart of hearts it visits upon him the ban of disgrace. We contend, of course, that these virtues so widely disseminated, these Christian amenities so commonly appropriated, without due credit being given, are the outspring of the Christian church and of the Christian gospel, and that men everywhere have from these sources their main impulse to usefulness and goodness, taking it from an environment bearing innumerable Christian marks, from an atmosphere charged with Christian truth and breathed in with every breath. But when this is allowed, let us not forget what it is in the Christian church and in the Christian gospel that is the real spring of these blessings. Those first disciples did not deliberately sit down and resolve to do honor and justice and walk humbly before God and men. Their inspiration to the Christian career of personal rectitude and benevolent service was not found in the Sermon on the Mount, but in the farewell address of their Master. Their initiation into the Lord's work was through a great religious experience. And that is the thing to be coveted to-day; the thing that must constitute the uniqueness of the church if it is to have any uniqueness; that must be its monopoly upon which none can infringe; that must be the magnetism of its appeal. As a constituency at home, as an official administering board, as actual laborers in the field, we must bring ourselves to believe, and make the conviction thrill in all our redemptive machinery, that in our midst, accompanying us at every step, guiding us into the truth, knitting us together in fraternal ties, taking the things of Christ and showing them unto us, yes, and bringing Him actually nigh unto us, is a personal, divine Spirit whose presence we can feel, whose power we can know.

We read in the book of the Acts of a man who sat in his chariot reading a book which he could not understand. Significant it was that the passage over which he pondered and which fascinated while it baffled him was the graphic picture of one who was likened to a lamb led to the slaughter and to a sheep dumb before the shearers, for this man though high in authority in the service of his queen belonged to a discredited race. And Philip, the Evangelist, drew nigh and lent his aid to the stranger. It is possible that the preacher's interest was the greater, because he was reminded of a certain noble ancestor of this lonely student, who rescued Jeremiah from the pit. The preacher explained the mystery of the passage, and the inquirer, as the logic of it dawned upon his mind, seized upon the blessed inference, and with a new hope burning within him, he said: "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" So the two went down into the river—the light skinned Greek and the dusky Ethiopian, the Negro—one in their consciousness of sin, one in their recognized need of cleansing, one in their reliance upon a power more than human, one in the baptism of the Spirit. Let us of this great American Missionary Association be mediators of that baptism, that the peoples whom we seek to help, red, yellow, black and white, may, together with us, be brought unto the stature of that collective man whom the great Apostle describes, in whom there shall be neither Greek, nor Jew, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ shall be all and in all.

BRIEF HISTORY.

Organization. The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846. It is distinctively a Christian missionary society to spread the gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity. It was organized with pronounced opposition to slavery, which then existed, and against all race and caste prejudice, which still exists. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the Amistad Committee, the Union Missionary Society, the Committee for West India Missions among the recently emancipated slaves of Jamaica, and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society for work among the American Indians.

In the foreign field, in 1854, its laborers numbered seventy-nine, located in West Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt among the Copts, Canada among the colored refugees and in North America among the Indians.

The home departments embraced two distinct fields, the West and the South. There were 112 home missionaries employed by the Association in 1860, fifteen of them being located in the slave states and in Kansas.

The missions in the slave states gave rise to some of the most stirring events in the history of the Association, which has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts, while slavery existed, to organize churches and schools in the South on an avowedly anti-slavery basis.

Among the Negroes. The crisis so long impending came at length, and the Union armies, entering the South in 1861, opened the way for the instruction and elevation of the colored people. The Association felt itself providentially prepared to engage in this work, and the first systematic effort for their relief was made by it. Large numbers of "contrabands," or escaping fugitive slaves, were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, Va., and were homeless and destitute. The Association, on the 17th of September, 1861, established the first day-school among the freedmen. That little school laid the foundation for the Hampton Institute which the Association founded later, and was the forerunner of the hundreds that have followed.

The Proclamation of Emancipation, dated January 1, 1863, insured the permanent freedom of Negroes who reached the Union lines. The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Norfolk the school of the previous year now numbered 1,200 pupils. Teachers were also sent to Newbern and Roanoke Island, N. C., to Beaufort, Hilton Head, St. Helena and Ladies' Island, S. C., and to St. Louis, Mo., and its force was scattered over the field held by our armies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.

Close of the War. Freedmen's Bureau. Boston Council. The year 1865 was marked by the close of the Civil War, by the establishment, by act of Congress, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the holding of a National Council of Congregational Churches in Boston, which recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted to carry it forward. The Association accepted the responsibility, appointed district secretaries at Chicago, Cincinnati and Boston, and collecting agents in other portions of the Northern states. It also solicited funds in Great Britain, and succeeded in securing that year a little more than the $250,000 recommended by the Council. Its receipts from all sources ran up from $47,828 in 1861 to $253,045 in 1866, and $420,768 in 1870.

But in the South there came a reign of terror under the infamous Ku-Klux-Klans—the Thugs of America. The colored people were often assaulted by mobs, dragged from their homes at midnight, and shot down in the streets. But there was no want of courage on the part of our teachers to enter or remain in the field; the number of teachers, which was 320 in 1865, was enlarged to 528 in 1867, 532 in 1868, and 533 in 1870.

Permanent Educational Institutions. It was during this very period that the beginnings were made for most of our permanent educational institutions. The Association must train the teachers and preachers for this people.

The Association now sustains as higher institutions: Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas, and Piedmont College. Georgia, together with forty-seven normal and graded schools and sixteen common schools scattered over the South and among the mountains, four schools among the Indians, twenty among the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific Coast, one in Alaska and three in Porto Rico.

Theological departments have also been established in Howard University, Talladega College, Straight University and Atlanta Seminary. Industrial instruction first began in Southern mission schools in Talladega, Ala., and was early introduced into many of our schools and has been constantly extended. Talladega College, Tougaloo University and Joseph K. Brick Normal School have large farms. In all the larger institutions and normal schools mechanical arts are taught to the boys, and household work, cooking, sewing, washing, nursing, etc,, to the girls. From these schools go forth annually hundreds of well-qualified teachers and ministers.

Church Planting. Simultaneously with the founding of these permanent institutions the Association began the planting of churches among the freedmen. They were formed mainly in connection with the educational institutions, and were intended to be models of true church life. The work of church planting has been pressed forward with a steady hand until the churches now number 247, located in nearly all the states of the South, among the Negroes, the Highlanders, the Indians and Chinese in the West, with most fruitful results. Sunday-schools, temperance efforts and revivals of religion have been marked features in the work. Christian Endeavor Societies were promptly organized and have been rapidly multiplied.

Conferences or associations have been formed, and of these there are now nine, designated as the Conferences of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Mountain Work. The early labors of the Association in home mission work were directed to the white people of the West and South. The mountain region of the Central South embraces West Virginia, southwestern Virginia, southeastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee and portions of northern Georgia and northern Alabama. It is 500 miles long and 200 miles wide, and contains a population of about 2,000,000, seven-eights of whom are white. Churches, preaching stations and schools have been established along or near the line of railroads traversing the mountain districts, or in regions not yet reached by such communications, where thousands of Highlanders live. Schools, churches and missions are now established in the mountain regions of five Southern states. The schools give prominence to normal and industrial training, sending out each year a large number of well-trained teachers, who, taking charge of the district schools, are making them over after the best models. Strategic points are occupied by these institutions, such as Wiliamsburg, Ky.; Grand View and Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Joppa, Ala.; Saluda, Blowing Rock and Whittier, N. C. The preaching of an intelligent gospel and the establishment of Sunday-schools, Mission Bands, Mothers' Circles and Christian Endeavor Societies contribute greatly to the development of these interesting Highlanders in their domestic and social life as well as that distinctively religious.

The Indians. Some of the earliest labors of the Association were among the Indians. In 1852 it had twenty-one missionaries stationed among the Indians of the Northwest. Various causes conspired to the gradual diminution of these missions. But in 1882 an arrangement was made with the American Board by which it transferred to the Association its Indian missions in this country, and the Association withdrew from missions in foreign lands. At the time of the transfer the Association had missions in Skokomish, Wash., Leach Lake, Minn., and Spokane Falls. The transfer from the Board committed to its care the mission and school at the Santee Agency, Neb., Oahe, S. D., with outlying stations on the Cheyenne and White Rivers, and the mission and scool at Fort Berthold, N. D. Since these missions and schools came under the care of the Association the facilities and force of workers have been increased, and missions have been added at Fort Yates, N. D.; Rosebud, S. D.; the Crow Agency, Mont., and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency, Oklahoma. The churches number twenty-two, with a membership of 1,596. Schools number four, with 213 pupils. The out-stations number fifty-six.

Alaska. Our Alaskan Mission at Cape Prince of Wales was formed in 1890. It is now entirely supported by the special contributions sent to our treasury for this purpose. In connection with the educational and mission work a herd of reindeer is in the care of a missionary. The report of our missionaries in Alaska presents a very hopeful picture of work among the Eskimos.

Chinese and Japanese in America. The American Missionary Association was one of the pioneers in mission service among the Chinese immigrants to California. It began the work as early as 1852. In 1874 Dr. W. C. Pond, pastor of the Bethany Church, San Francisco, was appointed superintendent.

The number of workers is sixty-one, and schools twenty, located at Bakersfield, Berkeley, Fresno, Los Angeles, Marysville, Oakland, Oroville, Pasadena, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Ventura, two at Santa Cruz, and three in San Francisco.

Over a thousand of these pagans have come into the Christian life, and a number of them have returned to their native land as missionaries.

The converted Chinamen have long desired the establishment of missions in their native country, to which, if they should return thither, they might resort as a Christian home, and from which they might go forth for mission work among their countrymen. The Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions, and which was organized in 1886, and commenced work in China in 1890, has already contributed above $15,000 to missions in China. With this they have established headquarters at Canton with property worth $40,000. They have also property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty years' lease of a good chapel in Ci Ning City, where they have organized a church.

Porto Rico. The American Missionary Association follows the flag. It did this in the Civil War, bringing the blessing of Christian instruction to the Negroes. It followed the same course at the close of the war with Spain. Porto Rico came under the flag and became a part of the national territory. The responsibility for the Christian instruction of the people fell with especial force upon our American churches. The American Missionary Association carefully investigated the field through representatives who were sent to the island. The need was found to be very great. There was an immediate demand for well-appointed Christian schools for the instruction of children and youth and also for the preaching of a broad and free gospel to the people. In 1899 eight teachers were sent to this field to establish and maintain these schools, and an evangelist to preach the gospel as widely as possible throughout the island. Four churches, with 573 members, are now organized.

Three schools have been established. One is located at Santurce, near San Juan, a strategic position for a large work; the other is at Lares, in the western portion of the island. The pastors also hold a circuit of preaching stations through the eastern portion of the island, where there are scarcely any other missionary efforts. There is great need for increased income to the Association to meet the demands of this large and growing field.

Bureau of Woman's Work. Formed in 1883. It gives direction and efficiency to the various lines of women's aid to the American Missionary Association. Women's State Missionary Unions and organizations co-operate in raising funds for the prosecution of the work of the Association.

Publications. The American Missionary magazine is issued in ten monthly numbers by this Association each year. It contains fresh information from the mission fields, the reports of importance of various committees and other matters of value to those studying these great mission fields. The magazine is published at fifty cents per year. It is generously illustrated, and presents in new form fresh material in each issue.

Congregational Work, the organ of all our Congregational societies, represents each month the work of the American Missionary Association.

A large number of interesting leaflets, bringing the most recent information obtainable, are also published. They are issued for general use and are distributed as desired among those interested in these great national and religious problems.

The American Missionary Association.

CONSTITUTION.

ART I. The Society shall be called the American Missionary Association.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scripture in our own country and other countries which are destitute of them or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Members of evangelical churches may be constituted members of this Association for life by the payment of thirty dollars into its treasury, with the written declaration at the time or times of payment that the sum is to be applied to constitute a designated person a life member; and such membership shall begin sixty days after the payments shall have been completed. Other persons, by the payment of the same sum, may be made life members, without the privilege of voting.

Every evangelical church which has within a year contributed to the funds of this Association, and every State or local Conference or Association of such churches, may appoint two delegates to the Annual Meeting of the Association; such delegates duly attested by credentials, shall be members of the Association for the year for which they were thus appointed.

The pastor of any evangelical church contributing to the funds of the Association within a year is thereby constituted a voting member for that year.

ART. IV. The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be held in the month of October or November, at such time and place as may be designated by the Association, or, in case of failure to act, by the Executive Committee, by notice printed in the official publication of the Association for the preceding month.

ART V.—The officers of this Association shall be a President, five Vice-Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, Auditors and an Executive Committee consisting of the President (ex-officio) and fifteen members, all of whom shall be elected by ballot as hereinafter provided.

The President, Vice-Presidents, Recording Secretary and Auditors shall be elected each year by the Association at its Annual Meeting.

At each Annual Meeting, after the adoption of this Article of the Constitution, three members of the Executive Committee shall be elected for the term of five years, and such other members as shall be required to fill vacancies. No member of the Executive Committee who has served one full term of five years shall be eligible for a re-election until one year shall have passed.

The Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries and the Treasurer shall be elected each year by the Association upon nomination of the Executive Committee.

ART. VI. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds, the appointing, counseling, sustaining and dismissing of missionaries and agents and the selection of missionary fields. They shall have authority to fill all vacancies in their own membership or in the officers of the Association occurring between the annual meetings until the next annual meeting; to apply to any Legislature for acts of incorporation or conferring corporate powers; to make provision, when necessary, for disabled missionaries and for the widows and children of deceased missionaries, and in general to tranact all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies. The acts of the Committee shall be subject to the revision of the Annual Meeting.

Five members of the Committee constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VII. No person shall be made an officer of the Association who is not a member of some evangelical church.

ART. VIII. Missionary bodies and churches or individuals may appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. IX. No amendment will be made to this Constitution except by the vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting at an Annual Meeting, notice of the amendment having been given at a preceding Annual Meeting.

CHARTER OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

Being Chapter Three Hundred and Fifty-eight of the Laws of 1862, as Amended by Chapter Seven Hundred and Ninety-six of the Laws of 1881, Chapter Fifty-two of the Laws of 1886, and Chapter Three Hundred and Ninety-five of the Laws of 1889 of the State of New York.

BY-LAWS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

ART I.—MEETINGS.

The Committee shall hold its regular meeting on the second Tuesday of each month at 3 o'clock, P. M. Special meetings may be called at the written request of any two members of the Committee. The call for any such special meeting and the notices sent out shall state the business to be considered.

Notices of the regular and special meetings of the Committees should be sent by mail to its members, or otherwise communicated in writing at least one day previous to the time of meeting.

ART. II.—OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES.

At the first regular meeting of the Committee after the Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, a Chairman, a Vice-Chairman and a Recording Secretary shall be chosen by ballot, who shall hold office for one year, or until their successors are elected. At the same meeting the following Standing Committees for the year shall be appointed, to consist of seven members each, three to constitute a quorum.

sary, checks upon the bank accounts of the Association, and to appoint all standing and special committees not otherwise provided for, subject to the approval of the Executive Committee.

VICE-CHAIRMAN.—In the absence of the Chairman, or in his disability to act, the Vice-Chairman shall perform his duties.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN.—In the absence or inability of both, a temporary Chairman may be appointed by the Executive Committee.

RECORDING SECRETARY.—The Recording Secretary shall keep the minutes of the Committee, and read them at its regular meetings. He shall cause all Committees to be notified, in writing, of their appointment within twenty-four hours thereafter, and shall inform them of the business referred to them. In his absence or inability to act the Chairman shall appoint a substitute.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to employ an expert accountant to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with the statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statements when approved by the accountant. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. This book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the members of the Executive Committee, and the record shall be so added to and amended, from time to time, under the direction of the Finance Committee, as to show at all times a correct statement of the property of the Association, and of any special trusts in its hands. All title deeds to real estate and certificates of stocks and bonds owned by the Association shall be in charge of this Committee, who shall provide a proper place for their safe keeping. This Committee shall, when occasion requires, direct the sale and transfer of stocks, invest any funds of the Association, not required or designed for current expenses, and in general shall have the oversight of financial concerns of the Association, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Missions to report to the Executive Committee, at its regular meeting every month, such suggestions or proposed action as shall seem to it desirable for furthering the efficiency and economy of the missionary and educational work of the Association. It shall also have power to manage the current work of the Association assigned to it, subject to the general supervision and direction of the Executive Committee.

COMMITTEE ON SUPPORT.—It shall be the duty of this Committee to meet at least once in two months to consider methods of promoting a missionary spirit throughout the churches, and of securing from the churches and friends of missions by addresses and publications, and through the various district offices and agencies and otherwise, the amounts required for the support and constant enlargement of the work, and to report to the Executive Committee such recommendations as shall seem desirable.

Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee) and consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in May or June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its own work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Chairmen of the three Standing Committees.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES may be appointed from time to time as required. Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee. All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

APPEALS.—Every appointee of the Association has the fullest liberty of appeal to the Executive Committee. Such communications shall be referred to the appropriate Committee according to the part of the field from which they come, for examination and a report on the matter involved, at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, when they shall receive careful attention in executive session.

ART. IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, except that which relates immediately to the Treasurer's department, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various Standing Committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient work of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of each member of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees, and to the Executive Committee, all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

All appointments of missionaries, whether they are to act as pastors or general missionaries, presidents and professors of chartered institutions, principals of high and normal schools, district secretaries, field superintendents and other agents, and all matters involving questions of property or affecting the policy of the Association, shall be referred to the Executive Committee for final action.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all money contributed or intrusted to the Association, and to give receipts therefor; to deposit it to the credit of the Asseciation in such bank or institution as may be designated by the Finance Committee; to keep clear and accurate accounts of all sums received and expended by the Association; to make payments and remittances in accordance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to endorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purpose of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them; to conduct the correspondence relating immediately to his department, and to perform such other acts as are necessary to the faithful execution of the duties of his office.

His books of account and vouchers for payment shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

It shall be his duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee such financial business as needs their action.

ART. VI.—DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches and in other ways disseminate information concerning the condition and needs of the Association throughout the districts assigned to them. They shall also collect funds, and perform such other duties as may be required. They shall keep in constant conference with the New York office, and every month shall send to it, for the Executive Committee, a report of their work the previous month and of the condition of the interests of the Association in their several districts.

ART. VII.—CHECKS AND PAYMENTS.

All checks upon the bank accounts of the Association may be signed by (1) the Chairman (or Vice-Chairman or Temorary Chairman) of the Executive Committee (2), a Corresponding Secretary, or (3), the Treasurer. Any two of these signatures shall render a check valid, but no check will be valid with one signature only. All transfers of stock, conveyances of real estate and other instruments requiring the seal of the Association shall be signed in the same manner, except that the Treasurer may sign receipts for money and for legacies, when paid in full or on account, and, if required, affix thereto the seal of the Association. The Treasurer may also sign and affix the seal of the Association, if required, to any papers in any legal proceeding in which the Association may be interested when specially authorized so to do by the Finance Committee.

All payments of the Association shall be made by check payable to order, except petty cash expenditures, which shall be paid by the Treasurer and at convenient times be aggregated, and a check shall be drawn to his order therefor.

No disbursement shall be made without authority of the Executive Committee.

ART. VIII.—CLAIMS FOR DISBURSEMENTS BY OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

All claims for disbursements by any officer or employee shall be accompanied by vouchers, except for telegrams, postage and traveling expenses, and charges below twenty dollars in amount, all of which shall be certified by the claimant to the Treasurer, with the items.

AIM, WORK AND FIELD.

To preach the gospel to the poor. It originated in a sympathy with the almost friendless slaves, and in its work recognizes no distinction of race or color. Since emancipation, it has devoted its main efforts to the South, endeavoring to prepare the NEGROES for their duties as citizens and Christians in America, and as missionaries in Africa. It also establishes missions and schools among the WHITES, especially in the mountain districts. As closely related to this, it seeks to benefit the CHINESE and JAPANESE in America, and to extend the blessings of the gospel and civilization to the INDIANS of North America. It conducts churches, schools and missions in Alaska and Porto Rico. In view of the necessity of elevating the WOMEN of these races, the Association has a BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK, to which it especially invites the co-operation of the Christian women of the churches.

MEMBERSHIP.

A payment of THIRTY DOLLARS will constitute a person a life member. (See Article III of the Constitution.)

LEGACIES.

Important legacies have been lost to the Association by informality. Care should be taken to give full name, "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION." The following form of bequest may be used:

The will should be attested by three witnesses (in some states three are required—in other states only two), who should write against their names their places of residence (if in cities the street and number.) B.,) as his last will and testament in the presence of us, who at the request of said (A. B.,) and in his presence, and in the presence of each other have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses." In some states it is required that charitable bequests should be made at least two months before the death of the testator; but this rule does not apply to bequests in the State of New York to this Association.

Financial Report.

The Report of the Finance Committee was presented by Mr. Charles A. Hull, N. Y., Chairman of the Executive Committee, and is as follows:

The statement of the Certified Public Accountant and the certificate of the Auditors are very satisfactory, and your Finance Committee heartily commends the business methods of the Association.

The current receipts for the year are $342,172.22, an increase of $16,693.84, and the expenditures are $363,509.13, a decrease of $10,472.41, compared with last year. The debt on the current year is $21,336.91 which, with the debt of $19,414.00 for 1902-03 and the debt of $48,503.16 for 1903-04, makes the total debt showing September 30th, 1905, $89,254.07. With the most conservative and economical supervision there will be occasionally years when temporary indebtedness will be incurred. Enlarged support is the surest method of avoiding debt.

The Reserve Legacy Plan, which went into effect three years ago, is proving very satisfactory, enabling the Executive Committee, in making appropriations, to estimate more accurately the amount available from legacies for the current work.

We are pleased to note the increase in receipts and the evidence that the friends of the Association are rallying to its support. The educational, Church and evangelistic work among the most needy races in our land presents a very urgent claim on the Christian and the patriot, and we earnestly appeal for a liberal offering from all the Churches, the Sunday-schools, the Young People's Societies, the Women's Missionary Societies and from individuals, for the work of the Association this new year.

Respectfully submitted,

A. Lyman Williston,
John H. Perry,
H. Clark Ford.

Resolution of Thanks.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this Association put on record the following Minute of grateful appreciation:

We would express our deep sense of the honor conferred in the generous welcome extended and facilities offered from first to last, so that our meetings have lacked nothing to make them inspiring, pleasant and profitable,

We desire to express specifically to the officials, citizens, churches and homes of this city, our sincere appreciation of the kindly, gracious and bounteous reception which, like the breaking of the alabaster box, has diffused an unwanted fragrance throughout our stay in Worcester.

We are always sensible of the mighty help of the press in promoting interest in our meetings, and thereby aiding so as to spread far and wide the knowledge of them, and to the press of this city, as well as to the railroads for their gracious and helpful courtesies, our thanks are especially due, and are hereby sincerely rendered.

We cannot forget to include in this Minute of gratefulness, the Old South Church, which has thrown open its doors so invitingly, anticipating every want, and all the churches of our order which, with unity and heartiness, have co-labored to make this anniversary one of rare profit.

We would especially remember with a sense of our ceaseless and unpayable obligation the hard-working local committees, whose labors of love contain, as always, the secret of the efficiency, order, pleasure of these annual gatherings, and make them of the greatest service to the largest number. They are the hidden agencies of all harmonious and efficient business, and to them belong a distinct meed of our grateful praise.

We are unable to express to the Jubilee Singers any adequate verbal appreciation of spiritual inspirations. Our hearts have been deeply touched, our visions enlarged, our sympathies deepened by their exquisite melodies, rendered so frequently during the progress of these meetings, and always with a beautiful ministration in song to our highest and best life.

We cannot fail to express to all our speakers, and all who have aided in these meetings by any service or message, brought often at great sacrifice from far distances and from busy spheres of activity and influence, our sense of obligation.

Finally, lest we may omit any one to whom our thanks should be rendered, we would erect a monument in this last clause and give to it this inscription, "To the unknown giver who by any act, gift or service, however humble, has helped this 59th anniversary of our Association."

To one and to all, our gratitude beyond the power of word, and with you all, we render our tribute to Him who is the source of all kindly instinct and plenteous resources, and the real Giver of every good and perfect gift, in whom, by whom, and for whom all this service has been so unselfishly rendered.

After singing, "My Country, 'tis of Thee," President Bradford pronounced the benediction, and the Fifty-ninth Annual Meeting of American Missionary Association was adjourned.

ASHER ANDERSON,
Recording Secretary.

FIFTY-NINTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1905.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The American Missionary Association was originally both a home and foreign missionary society. Its charter authorizes it to "conduct missionary and educational operations and diffuse the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, in the United States and other countries." The foreign missionary work it has, however, transferred to other hands, in order that it might be free to devote itself to those in our own land whose disabilities, whether natural or acquired, have made them most dependent on Christian sympathy and aid. To all such people it would minister in Christ's name through both church and school. In this work it knows no distinction of race or color or previous condition, except that it would recognize the obligation to serve most faithfully those who are the least favored in privilege and opportunity.

The scope of the work is broad. It extends now to eight different races, one of which has been adopted during the past year, and it touches the extreme limits of our American domain. On the west, we send aid across the sea to the Hawaiian Islands, once the most inaccessible mission of the American Board, with a simple and docile population, but now a half-way station on the great thoroughfare between America and the Orient, where the most diverse races from both sides of the globe are gathered together. On the east, we send missionaries to our new island dependency of Porto Rico, with its problems of illiteracy, poverty and immorality, inherited from centuries of Spanish misrule and neglect. On the mainland, from the Arctic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico, the most backward races, those most unprivileged and most difficult of assimilation—Asiatic, African, and aboriginal American—receive through us the message of sympathy and hope and the enlightening influence of Christian institutions. It is our pleasure also to serve those of our own race who have been passed by in the rush of modern progress, and we rejoice greatly in the Christian schools and the churches of puritan faith which we are privileged to maintain among the highlanders of our southern mountains and in regions still further south.

This is our field and our work. It is widespread, multifarious and diversified, and yet it is everywhere inspired by a single aim and makes use of a similar method. It is preaching the Gospel to the poor. It is patriotic as well as Christian. It has faith in all classes of men and in "their recoverableness at the very worst," because it has faith in God and in His purposes for humanity.

A brief review of this work during the past year is herewith given.

It is impossible to estimate the value of our educational work in the South, or to insure for the future the same good results that have obtained in the past, without a clear recognition of the new conditions under which the work is being carried on. There are, here and there, eddies in the tide, but the movement in behalf of popular education is steadily forward. The conditions are by no means ideal, but they are improving. The South is poor, but it is not ungenerous, according to its means, in the support of its common schools. The distribution of the school funds between the two races is still disproportionate and unfair, but the wrong is not altogether unrecognized, and is in some places being gradually corrected. Northern philanthropy, operating through educational boards, is encouraging this general advance in the public school system.

All this has a special significance for the American Missionary Association in its southern educational work. It gives new value to our higher institutions. It demands the multiplication and enlargement of our splendid schools of normal grade. It calls for new and expensive additions to our equipment for industrial training. But, most of all, it emphasizes the need of an education that is distinctively Christian, where character is formed, and lessons of integrity and purity and industry and self-sacrifice are daily taught.

The past year shows a gratifying advance along the lines thus suggested.

Our Chartered Institutions have been especially prospered. FISK UNIVERSITY, Tennessee, has made a new beginning in its theological department, which gives promise of permanent success. Its academic work has been well maintained. A significant feature in connection with Fisk, and one likely to have a large influence upon its future, is the proposed organization of a "School of Applied Science." The trustees of the Slater Board have offered to give the university $5,000 a year for five consecutive years for the teaching force, provided a new building shall be erected and equipped to cost at least $25,000. Prof. Waterman is giving his special attention to the raising of this money. Mr. Carnegie has promised the university $20,000 for a new library when an equal amount can be secured for its maintenance. The announcement of a bequest of $100,000 to the general fund of TALLADEGA COLLEGE, Alabama, by the late Mr. James Callanan, of Des Moines, was made at our last annual meeting. The bequest is to be paid in five annual installments, the first of which is expected soon. Talladega has made material gain during the past year. The new Carnegie Library is finished, with the exception of the book stacks, temporary shelves being used until money is secured for the more permanent stacks. A complete printing outfit has been donated to the college, as well as valuable machinery and tools for the shop, and a new boiler for the steam plant. A school for nurses has been organized. A small hospital is much needed. The college is overcrowded. Hundreds have been refused admission from lack of room. More boys have been refused than could be received. A new boys' dormitory is a pressing necessity, and a theological hall is greatly desired. An interesting feature this year is the admission of eleven Cuban students. TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY, Mississippi, has had a prosperous year, fully maintaining its usual high standard of efficiency, although owing to the collapse of Strieby Hall the boys have been without a dormitory and have been tucked into all sorts of odd corners. The new Strieby Hall is well under way, and will be ready for occupancy early in the winter. The Association has been obliged to advance the $10,000 necessary for this work, as it could not be longer delayed, and we are anxiously seeking donations. STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY, New Orleans, La., has had an uneventful year. The yellow fever epidemic will unfortunately delay the opening of the school for several weeks and sadly interfere with the work of the new year. TILLOTSON COLLEGE, Austin, Texas, has taken on new life and hope. The number of students has been greatly increased and the standard advanced. The funds at the disposal of the Association for this important school are entirely inadequate. These institutions are all for colored students.

Our schools of normal grade for colored students have generally made an excellent record. Some of them have been so greatly prospered as to give them no little embarrassment and perplexity. They need more room and more teachers, which the Association is unable to supply. In several cases the principals of the schools have bravely taken the matter into their own hands, after obtaining permission from the Executive Committee to raise the money and enlarge their plant. Miss Cathcart, at King's Mountain, N. C.; Miss Phillips, at Marion, Ala.; Miss Emerson, at Moorhead, Miss., and Mr. Wiley, at Fessenden, Fla., have all been conducting building operations of considerable importance without drawing upon the treasury of the Association. Others would gladly have made the same effort if it had seemed wise to the Committee to encourage them. The devotion and sacrifice of these consecrated teachers call for the highest praise. The limitations under which they are compelled to work, and to overwork, are greatly to be deplored. Disastrous fires at Enfield, N. C., Cappahosic, Va., and Albany, Ga., have made new buildings an imperative necessity. The noble benefactions of the late Mrs. Julia E. Brick have made possible the completion of the work at Enfield, N. C. At Cappahosic, Va., the loss has only been partially supplied through lack of funds. At Albany, Ga., the principal has secured a portion of the money needed from Southern donors.

A new school, the Mount Hermon Seminary, in Mississippi, has come into the possession of the Association by deed of gift from Miss Sarah A. Dickey, its founder and long-time principal. The Storrs School, Atlanta, Ga., which was closed last year, has been maintained by the city Board of Education, and the city has arranged to purchase the property and continue the school. An unusual number of changes in the management of schools has been made necessary through the resignation of principals, some of whom have been long in our service and highly esteemed for their work's sake. It is only by rare good fortune that we have found worthy successors. Several of our schools have enjoyed during the year special seasons of religious interest.

The Daniel Hand Fund, the income of which is used by the Association "for the education of colored people of African descent residing in the recent slave States," continues its beneficent influence from year to year. Twenty-one schools have been maintained out of the income of this fund, either in whole or in part, and student aid has been given to a large number of needy students.

In our mountain schools there has been both loss and gain. The interest in education among the mountain people does not decline. In many places they are starting schools of their own. Conditions are changing in the mountains, as elsewhere in the South, and a wise economy in the use of men and money demands a careful study of the local situation with possible readjustments to meet new needs. Moved by these considerations, we have temporarily closed our schools at La Follette, Tenn., and Blowing Rock, N. C., and have strengthened others. Black Mountain Academy, far away from all railroads, in the very heart of the mountain district, at Evarts, Ky., has had a remarkable year. Green Academy, Nat, Ala., has been greatly revived and taken a new lease of life, and is planning still larger things. Saluda Seminary, North Carolina, greatly needs a new school building. Grand View, Tennessee, is almost, if not quite, covetous of an adjoining farm, which is for sale. Pleasant Hill, Tennessee, is reaping the advantages of many years of sacrifice. Williamsburg Academy, Kentucky, is no more; but in its place is the HIGHLAND NORMAL COLLEGE, the same institution, with a new name, a local advisory board of interested supporters, an overplus of students, and a fine new school building approaching completion, for which the president is just now raising money in the North to pay last bills. PIEDMONT COLLEGE, on "the hills of Habersham," in northeast Georgia, is both a highland and lowland institution, and ministers to a wide region. It has just closed a most successful year under its new president, who, assisted by the dean, is courageously facing the task of raising $75,000 to secure a gift of $25,000 from Dr. Pearson for an endowment fund.

Atlanta Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., has justified the faith of its founders in establishing a school for the training of pastors for our white churches in the South. It enters upon its new year under the presidency of the Rev. E. Lyman Hood, Ph. D., and merits the confidence and support of our people.

CHURCH WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Number of churches	206
Ministers and missionaries	127
Church members	11,945
Total additions	1,118
Sunday-school scholars	12,707
Benevolent contributions	$4,365
Raised for church purposes	$45,798

We report this year fewer churches, but an increased membership. A number of churches which had become extinct, or nearly so, have been taken from the list. Three or four new churches have been added, and others have been enlarged and strengthened. On the whole our church work shows an encouraging advance.

This is especially true of our Negro churches. There are 156 of these Negro Congregational churches in the thirteen States between the District of Columbia and Oklahoma, and one who visists them and attends their associational meetings cannot fail to be impressed with their intelligence, their high moral standard and their evangelistic spirit. Congregationalism has a clear call among the colored people of the South. It is needed there. Our schools are and must be undenominational. Our churches are distinctively Congregational, which means that they are unsectarian, self-governing, evangelical, puritan. Many of them are poor and dependent, but this weakness is often a sign of their moral strength and the result of their conscientious adherence to high standards. They are by no means perfect, but their influence extends far beyond their own membership, and other denominations hold them in respect. A special feature of the year has been the effort to build houses of worship. The day of "arbors" and hired halls has, in their opinion, gone by, and, moved by a common impulse, in city and country, the churches have a mind to build. A score or more of little churches have building operations under way at the present time, involving an expenditure of from three hundred to a thousand dollars each. A number of more substantial city churches have been finished during the past year, notably at Chattanooga, Tenn.; Birmingham, Ala.; Augusta, Ga., and Abbeville, La. In each of these cases the Congregational Church Building Society has assisted with loan and grant.

A new interest seems to be awakening among our mountain churches, especially in the way of closer and more helpful church fellowship. Kentucky has taken the lead in this, and appointed a State committee to look after the weaker churches, assist them in getting ministers and encourage self-support. Nothing can be more helpful or hopeful than this—our churches in the mountains are few and scattered and need each other's sympathy. There is a special call just now for several wise, energetic and man-loving pastors, good "mixers," as the mountaineers say—men who will mingle with the people, and live for them, and win them to Christ. It is a self-sacrificing work, but it has its reward.

The transfer of our church and school at Lares to the Presbyterians has been effected, and our distinctively evangelistic work is now confined to the eastern end of the island, as arranged by the four co-operating denominations. Our educational work is centralized at Santurce, near San Juan. The Blanche Kellogg Institute at Santurce affords the best opportunity on the island for the development of a strong and influential Christian school. Its location is superb, its record is good, it is in favor with all the people. The responsibility for the work is ours. Mr. George M. Kellogg, who furnished the money to purchase the school site, promises to give $5,000 more, when an equal amount is otherwise provided, to build a suitable school building. An effort will soon be made looking toward a new dormitory and teachers' home. When these necessary buildings are secured the school will, for the first time, be adequately equipped.

Our evangelistic work on the island has moved rapidly forward during the year. Two ordained missionaries entered the field a year ago. One of them returned to the States, and the other is now doing the work of the two. Dr. Edwards continues at Fajardo, where the Church Building Society has erected a fine church building. A mission house, for which special funds have been provided, is nearly completed at Las Cabezas. Two missionaries and their wives, two single ladies and five native preachers make up our force. This is less than one-third of the average number employed by the other denominations engaged with us in Porto Rican work. The people are eager to receive the Gospel. Reinforcements are imperative if we expect to do our share in the evangelization of the island.

The Indian missions, in common with all other parts of our great field, have carried forward the work of the past year on reduced appropriations. The strain has been severe, but the missionaries have continued bravely on with their arduous task.

The SANTEE NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL, Santee, Neb., has had an increased number of students, both in the regular school and in the correspondence course. The work of the school has gone steadily forward in all its departments. Through its former pupils Santee is exercising a constantly increasing influence in the world, its graduates being much in evidence at missionary gatherings and giving a good account of themselves. Some of them are showing an interest in Santee by contributions to its support.

In the CHEYENNE RIVER RESERVATION, South Dakota, all the seven churches except one contribute to the support of their pastors, and are taking upon themselves the responsibilities of church life and growth. The missionary, as superintendent of the mission, plans to visit each of these churches once every two months, which means a drive of nearly five hundred miles for each full tour. The mission at the ROSEBUD RESERVATION, South Dakota, has been temporarily deprived of its missionary through his transfer to Alaska for special service. The native pastors are carrying on the work at their several stations, and provision will be made for superintendence as soon as possible. The STANDING ROCK RESERVATION is in both Dakotas, and is divided into two districts by the State line. It covers an extensive territory and includes many stations. Its two missionaries continue their faithful work of visitation to the churches and preaching stations, advising, encouraging and directing. There is a Woman's Missionary Society and a Y. M. C. A. at each mission station in the Grand River District. The missionary, Rev. Mary C. Collins, has been elected by the whole tribe on Standing Rock Agency to be "The Next Friend," and acts for the Indians at councils and in various legal and political relations. She has been in the work for thirty years. FORT BERTHOLD MISSION has three stations, for three different tribes speaking three distinct languages. The missionary, Rev. C. L. Hall, has during the year edited two books of hymns and Scripture selections, one in the Ree and one in the Gros Ventre language, having previously done a similar work in the Mandan. Seventeen have been added to the church and fifteen infants baptized. Contributions are made to all Congregational causes. Apropos of retrenchment, the missionary asserts that "the devil does not retrench; he can always find some appropriation appropriate to his work." Fort Berthold church is one of the pioneer churches of the State, and the missionary is the oldest in missionary service in North Dakota.

On the CROW RESERVATION, Montana, self-denying evangelistic service has effectively supplemented the work of the Government school. During the enforced absence of Rev. Mr. Burgess the past summer in search of health his devoted wife has guided the affairs of the mission. The tireless missionary at the SKOKOMISH RESERVATION, in Washington, has traveled 5,500 miles during the year in visiting his preaching stations, mostly "by foot, wagon, rowboat and horseback." He has preached a hundred times, held a hundred and fifty other services and made more than six hundred visits. The CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE mission, in Oklahoma, reports a larger attendance than ever of adult Indians. A Friday evening service and social has developed unexpected interest and led to several conversions. More children than usual have attended Sunday-school during the summer. The transfer of this mission to the Baptists is now being considered.

Our mission in ALASKA has suffered during the past year through the recall of our former missionary. During the summer the Rev. James F. Cross, of the Rosebud Mission, in Dakota, consented to go to Alaska and take charge of the important interests there for the coming year. He has arrived on the field and entered upon his work. We expect full reports from him before the long Arctic winter sets in.

The California Chinese Mission is auxiliary to the American Missionary Association, and carries on the work of the Association among the Chinese and Japanese of California, acting as its agents in the disbursement of funds and in the superintendence of its missionary work in that State.

By means of this efficient agency our churches are rendering a most Christlike service to an alien people. The poor Chinaman has in this mission a home, a school and a church. In a strangely hostile land he hears the voice of a friend; learns for the first time what Christian sympathy is, and finds the way to God. Perhaps no other effort in the wide field of Christian missions has brought larger returns in proportion to the investment made.

The inspiring personality in this good work has been the Rev. Dr. Pond, who for many years has united the superintendency of the mission with the pastorate of a city church. The most noteworthy thing in the history of the mission during the past year is, therefore, Dr. Pond's relinquishment of his pastorate that he may give his entire time to the Chinese and Japanese work.

While the number of Chinese on the Pacific Slope is steadily decreasing, the Japanese are just now pouring in like a flood. A competent observer estimates that the Japanese in the Pacific States must now number "close to one hundred thousand," and he adds that they are destined largely to increase, and will eventually become citizens, or, at least, their children will. The Japanese department of the California Mission, therefore, takes on a new importance, and urgently calls for reinforcement. In order that these newcomers may be promptly reached by Gospel influences, the Rev. Hiromichi Kozaki, of Japan, formerly president of the Doshisha and now a distinguished Congregational pastor in Tokyo, is at this very time making an evangelistic tour among his fellow-countrymen on the Pacific Slope, under the auspices of this Association. We expect large results from this visit, and his mission should be speedily followed by effective measures for permanent work.

HAWAIIAN EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

At our last annual meeting a deputation from the Hawaiian Evangelical Association met the Executive Committee of this Association and presented the claim of the Hawaiian Islands upon the sympathy and aid of the Congregational churches of America. The Hawaiian Evangelical Association has been the local missionary organization on the islands since the landing of the first missionares of the American Board, in 1820. For the past forty years it has assumed full charge of the missionary work there and has borne the burden of its support. This it could well do while the simple conditions of former times remained. But when these conditions were strangely changed, introducing a new alien population—Portuguese, Chinese and Japanese—in such numbers as to threaten the civilization of the islands, the problem with which our brethren were confronted was too difficult for them to solve alone, and they turned to the home churches of the mainland for help.

The conference with the deputation at Des Moines had been preceded by a considerable correspondence, and has been followed by other conferences in New York between the Executive Committee and Dr. Doremus Scudder, the Corresponding Secretary of the Hawaiian Board. The result was a clear conviction on the part of the Committee that the appeal of our brethren ought not to be in vain. We believed that the churches would look to us to assume, on their behalf, a share in this new work. We felt that we would be untrue to the trust reposed in us if we refused. It was at first arranged that the Congregational Home Missionary Society and the American Missionary Association should act jointly in the business, the Home Missionary Society making an annual grant of $3,000 for native Hawaiian work and the American Missionary Association one of $6,000 for Chinese and Japanese work. But after the return of Dr. Scudder to Hawaii, the Hawaiian Board requested, in the interest of simplicity and economy, that the American Missionary Association should take the work alone; and this was done. We now make this statement and present this appeal. We believe that the churches of our order throughout the land will approve our action, and we sincerely hope that they will provide the additional funds required to meet this new charge upon our resources.

Our brethren in Hawaii report themselves as being greatly cheered and encouraged by our grant. Their last annual report is issued under the striking caption, "Whereof We are Glad." It announces that under the inspiration of our grant more than $10,000 in extra gifts has been contributed by friends of the mission in the Territory, and that for the first time in several years their board is free from debt.

In order that our churches may be more thoroughly informed on the conditions in Hawaii which have led to this appeal, we have asked that Dr. Scudder might conduct a three months' campaign of information through the country. No man can explain the situation so well as he. He is already with us. We bespeak for him everywhere a hearty and generous welcome.

This plan assures much less fluctuation in available receipts from legacies each year for the current work. It is hoped that under the present plan the underdesignated legacies will soon assure an annual amount of about $100,000 each year for current work.

CONDITIONAL GIFTS.

Your committee calls special attention to the Conditional Gift Plan which enables persons of middle life or advanced years to make gifts to the Association and receive annually a certain sum in semi-annnual payments during the life of the donor. This annual amount is fully as much as can be assured from any safe investment in these days of fluctuating values. The persons making the gifts have the satisfaction of knowing that the money is in the treasury of the Association. This plan is entirely satisfactory to those who have made gifts and received the agreement of the Association to make the payments as designated. During the past year $23,716 have been added to the Conditional Gift Fund and $2,000 have been released by the death of the donors and included in the current receipts.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

Through this department Women's Organizations have been given much information of the field, furnished with material for programs, missionary letters and speakers. Activity in Women's State and local societies is shown in increased contributions, the receipts this year to the American Missionary Association amounting to $31,174.92. We greatly value and welcome the co-operation of all Women's Societies and Young People's Societies in the support of this missionary work.

SPECIAL ACTION OF THE ASSOCIATION.

At the fifty-eighth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association, held in conjunction with the National Council at Des Moines, Iowa, the following votes were taken and matters of importance referred to the Executive Committee:

"Resolved, That this Association, in annual meeting assembled, hereby instructs its Executive Committee to take steps at an early day to meet with the other homeland societies through a sub-committee to arrange, if possible, with such societies for the holding of a joint meeting in 1905, and that, failing in such effort, full discretion and authority are hereby given to the Executive Committee to arrange as heretofore for the annual meeting of this Association."

Carrying out the instruction of this resolution, your Committee conferred with the representatives of the C. H. M. S. and other homeland societies. By the Constitution of the A. M. A., Article IV., the time for the annual meeting of the Association must be in October or November. The annual meeting of the C. H. M. S. was held in the spring. It was therefore impossible to join with that society in an annual meeting this year. Following the instruction of the Association as recited in the resolution above, your Committee arranged for the fifty-ninth annual meeting as the Constitution provided.

Other action taken at the fifty-eighth annual meeting last year refers to this same matter, as follows:

"Notice was given that at the next annual meeting the Association will be requested to vote on the omission of the words 'in the month of October or November,' in Article IV. of the Constitution."

This matter, therefore, is before the body at this session.

The following resolution was passed at the annual meeting last year:

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee be requested to make special efforts during the coming year to secure donations for the purpose sufficient to replace this building" (Strieby Hall, Tougaloo, Miss.), "and so keep in honor the memory of our former Secretary."

The Executive Committee and secretaries have in pursuance of these instructions sought to secure the donations needed for this important purpose. Pres. F. G. Woodworth, of Tougaloo, has given time and effort to the accomplishment of this end. "The Outlook" fulfilled its generous offer and made special reference to this movement in the columns of that paper. Special leaflets were issued and correspondence was carried on and personal interviews had in many cases. We are sorry to report that the donations are not yet sufficient to complete Strieby Hall.

Another resolution was adopted at the last annual meeting as follows:

"Resolved, That we request the Executive Committee, before cutting down and crippling the splendid work in the field, to consider the feasibility of reducing administrative expenses, especially the practicability of spending less money in secretarial force and collecting agencies."

The Executive Committee have sought in the most economical way possible to administer the affairs of the Association. The reduction of the force reaching the churches almost necessarily involves the reduction in the income of the Association from the churches. This is always the danger in reduction of agencies employed in bringing this work before the churches and individuals. The secretarial force for the coming year will be lessened by the resignation of Dr. F. P. Woodbury, who has efficiently served the Association for fifteen years as a corresponding secretary, and who has accepted a professorship in Howard University. The valuable services of Dr. Woodbury will be greatly missed in office correspondence and administration. Your Committee bears testimony to his devoted and faithful labors during these years of his administration. Howard University will be greatly reinforced in its faculty by this change.

The administrative and office expenses have been reduced by about $8,000. This has been accomplished by a voluntary reduction of salaries on the part of officers and painful economy in incidental expenses.

In reference to the matter of Limited Governing Representative Membership, which was referred to the Executive Committee, we would recommend that this matter be laid on the table.

This Association has already taken action approving a single magazine. The Executive Committee have sought to carry out the instructions of the Association so far as possible. Much care and thought have been given to the publication of a union periodical. Those unacquainted with the facts can scarcely appreciate the value of the present magazine in reaching our constituents. We are reluctant to surrender this valuable agency until such adjustments have been made with the other societies that its place shall be filled by a combined periodical of equal or greater value.

AMONG OUR CONSTITUENTS.

The Committee would express its hearty appreciation and gratitude to the large constituency of churches, Sunday-schools, societies and individuals who in many ways show their interest in the great work which this Association is accomplishing. The close relation which these mission interests hold to the problems of national development and stable government is being more and more appreciated. The representatives of the Association have been cordially received in the pulpits and on the platforms during the year, and large and general interest is manifest in the Christian solution of these national problems. Perhaps no missionary organization in the land holds so close relationship to the questions that interest and agitate us as citizens as does this Association. The Negro problem in the South, or rather the problem of two races living together, both increasing rapidly and maintaining their racial separation in one section of our country, attracts wider attention among patriotic Christians to-day than ever before. That the solution of this problem proposed by this Association, namely, the industrial, intellectual and spiritual elevation of both races, is the only true and sure solution is the growing conviction. This message and the messenger who brings it, be he secretary or missionary of the American Missionary Association, finds a cordial and large welcome in the churches. We recognize this fact and rejoice in it. In the reduction of the secretarial force next year, which seemed necessary for economic reasons, it will be necessary to disappoint a good number of our churches who invite a representative of the Association to their pulpits and platforms.

The Young People's Forward Movement is both encouraging and typical. Study Classes organized through this movement in many of our churches have used the Study Leaflets relating to the field of this Association. We have the testimony that they have proved helpful. This movement is growing in strength and numbers. We believe that it will prove an important reinforcement of missionary effort among the churches in the future.

We recognize with deep gratitude the generous gifts of our constituents in behalf of this work during the year just closing. Donations have been substantially the same as those of last year. This is only one measure of interest, but it is a measure of that interest. The enlarging scope of the work, however, makes it imperative that these donations should be largely increased if our Congregational body meet its responsibilities and do the work that in God's providence seems assigned to it in the field reached by the American Missionary Association.

With the confidence of the churches and individuals among the constituency evidently continued toward this work and administration, with doors of opportunity swinging wide open before us in many directions, with the vast significance of these Christian problems as bearing upon the honor and stability of our Government, we believe that we may press forward into the work of the new year with confident anticipation and abiding faith that the sympathy and even larger support of the churches and the presence and help of God are with us in this missionary movement for a physical, intellectual and spiritual redemption of these millions of our own fellow citizens.

Obituaries.

Rev. Jeremiah Eames Rankin, D.D., LL.D., died at the residence of his daughter, Cleveland, Ohio, on the morning of November 28th, 1904. Dr. Rankin, as pastor of the First Congregational Church in Washington, became known in the nation as a most earnest and faithful friend of the emancipated people of the South. While resident in New Jersey, he was a valued member of the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association. Next he gave thirteen years of eminent service as president of Howard University. Living to a ripe old age, the gracious influences of his long life can never be measured.

Mrs. H. T. Johnson, the wife of our pastor at Walden, Ga., died in January. Mrs. Johnson was born of Northern parents, who came from Hartford, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were employed by the American Missionary Association in 1890. During all the succeeding years Mrs. Johnson has been a devoted and valuable teacher in the parochial school where her husband has been pastor. A faithful servant of Christ has gone to her reward.

Rev. Mason Jones, for years a faithful and efficient missionary among the Highlanders of Kentucky, died on Sunday, June 11th. He had been ill for some time but seemed rapidly to be regaining his health. Suddenly, without a moment's warning, he passed away. His last work was the planting of a little Sunday-school in a log schoolhouse near his home. Other faithful Christian workers, stimulated by his example and sacrifice, are sustaining the work to which he gave his last earnest effort.

Miss Mary H. Delegal, a teacher at Dorchester Academy, McIntosh, Georgia, died in June last. She was one of the colored teachers, born and brought up in Seabrook, Georgia, and educated at Dorchester Academy. She has been faithful and devoted in her work and her people lose an efficient leader in her death.

ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

There is never a year of missionary work that is not packed with events of intense interest and import, but in the annual summing up only a hint can be given here and there of the richness of the year's experience. For at the close of a year interest centers upon results which of necessity are compacted and briefly stated. As we report some of these results in the field of the American Missionary Association, obtained through the co-operation of women workers, may each who had any part in gifts of time or money or toil be encouraged by what has been accomplished.

With gratitude to God and thanks to those by whom His good gifts have been made available, we report an increase in contributions for the past year through women's societies. Received from Women's State organizations $26,931.28 and $4,243.64 sent by local societies directly to the National treasury; total, $31,174.92.

This is the largest amount ever received by the American Missionary Association in a single year through Women's Organized Work, and the gain is encouraging to us all. Yet it is not surprising. It is simply a testimony to the growing intelligence of women on missionary lines. For the field of the American Missionary Association has enlarged, and many women are alive to the fact and are striving to live up to the new responsibilities. With no diminution of need in the South, but rather a necessity to increase just the kind of work the Association has in hand for the Negro race and also the mountain people; with the work for the Chinese and Indians still urgent and pressing, there has yet been added to this large field of missions a rapidly developing work of evangelism in Porto Rico and a very important and significant work in the Hawaiian Islands, making a greatly increased demand upon the A. M. A. treasury.

Proportions in missionary work change materially with changing events. Missionary need in America is taking on great, even alarming, proportions, and intelligent women are studying the facts and situation, learning just what must be done and by what agencies. These women leaders will obtain their followers, and here is where we find the "signs of promise" for a steady, even if gradual, increase of contributions to the American Missionary Association. Clearer knowledge of the conditions that create the need must surely increase the power back of the money flow and fill the missionary treasury.

It has been a busy year in Woman's Work at the Mission Rooms. Teachers have been assigned as representatives of State organizations; field letters have been secured and thousands of copies circulated; new leaflets have been widely distributed. In this work of informing the local societies we have been greatly helped by the active interest of State officers, whose cordial and valuable co-operation we greatly appreciate. Speakers have been found for many meetings, the Secretary of the Woman's Bureau also speaking from the viewpoint of the field. Much definite work has been assigned for contributions of varying amounts. Those who desire it may have their contributions applied in some definite way in every department of the A. M. A. field. To young people especially is the work thus made more real. Sums ranging from $25 to $400 are needed as shares in the support of a missionary who becomes the special representative in the field for such contributors. Sums from $5 upward are applied to particular schools or to aid worthy students. Scholarships of $75 to $100 will provide for a boy or girl in a boarding institution, paying for his education as well as for his board; $8 to $12 a year will pay the tuition of a boy or girl in a day school. In the course of every year there are unexpected calls upon the A. M. A. treasury for objects interesting to young people, which can be named upon application. Requests come from all parts of the field for aid to the missionary work in the way of clothing, household furnishings and supplies of dried fruits and vegetables. Seven hundred and thirteen boxes of supplies have been received, and have given valuable help in the work. All contributions of clothing that will encourage to cleanliness, neatness and self-respect aid the missionaries in this phase of their missionary work.

There is a fund of information at "headquarters" in the Missionary Rooms. It can be had all the way from "The Origin of the American Missionary Association" up to the movements of the present day. It can be had in general or particular form; of schools or a school, of missionaries or one particular missionary, churches or a single church. Field letters have done much to bring home workers into touch with the missionaries, but even these need often to be supplemented with other information from headquarters in order to get the right perspective.

A newly elected president of a local society wrote recently to the Woman's Bureau a long letter of questions, adding: "I have attended our missionary meetings for some time, and now am president; and I want to become so acquainted with the work and workers that I can answer all questions satisfactorily." Perhaps it was because as a member she asked questions that she was elected president. Progressive women are asking questions.

The very best foundation for knowledge of the A. M. A. work is The American Missionary magazine. It is only fifty cents a year. It is a storehouse to which to resort for good missionary material on many different subjects, and from which to obtain a "picture gallery" of mission fields. Every woman who means to know, would do well to have her own file of The American Missionary. Congregational Work also contains three pages monthly, of interesting information from the A. M. A. field.

Every year the American Missionary Association prints a pamphlet giving a list of all its schools and churches, with their location and names of missionaries connected with them, with their home addresses. This is helpful to a study of the whole field, and also in understanding the relation of particular schools and missionaries. It is a guide. Sometimes a woman's society thinks it is contributing to an A. M. A. school when it is really aiding some outside, and possibly non-supervised, work. The guide would reveal this.

In the united study of missions of foreign fields, we have this year again come to a subject that links naturally with the work of the American Missionary Association—the study of Africa. Two years ago the study of Rex Christus interested many in the study also of the Chinese in America. This year the introduction of Christus Liberator, an outline study of Africa, will, we hope, be associated with a careful, thorough study of the African in America, his race elevation, obstacles and opportunities in a Christian land.

We have already referred to the enlarged work through the addition of the Hawaiian Islands to the A. M. A. field of missions. Will every woman's society bear this in mind when making collections for the American Missionary Association? We hope every society may add to its previous offerings a portion for this field also. Special leaflets will be furnished for the study of the Hawaiian work.

The close of a year is but the opening of a new year. Without any wait or break, the work goes on with only the swift placing of the record between. Nevertheless, we begin a new record in new hope, courage and devotion, seeing plainly that in our Women's Work we can and ought yet to do larger things; that what we have accomplished is indeed but small compared to what God calls us American Christians to do for His Kingdom in America. The field forces of the American Missionary Association are already at their posts, absorbed in this great work for the Negroes, mountaineers, Chinese and Japanese, Indians and Eskimos, Porto Ricans and Hawaiians. In one little corner of the field a missionary exclaims, "God pity the man or woman who could look into these faces and not see the possibilities." We have looked; let us look again, and answer the imploring, imperative call to give every one of these little ones his chance to become an intelligent Christian force in the Kingdom of God. The recent federation of women's State organizations should increase their influence and usefulness in raising funds for missions in America. Can we reach $35,000 the coming year from women's societies for the work of the American Missionary Association?

AUDITORS' CERTIFICATE.

We have employed Frederick C. Manvel, Certified Public Accountant of the State of New York, to examine the books and accounts of H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer of The American Missionary Association, for the year ending September 30th, 1905, and herewith submit his statement of the results of his work as a part of our report.

We have also made a careful examination of all bonds and other securities held by the Association and find the same to agree with the records in the books and balance sheet of same date.

The Treasurer's Bond was submitted to us and found to be in order.

EDWIN H. BAKER,
JOHN E. LEECH,
Auditors.

New York, October 9th, 1905.

MR. EDWIN H. BAKER, } Auditors.
MR. JOHN E. LEECH, }

GENTLEMEN:

In accordance with your instructions, I have made an audit of the accounts of the Treasurer of THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, for the year ending September 30th, 1905, and hereby report that I have found the same correct, with the same system and methods in every part of the work, which have been noted and commended in former reports, still used. There is evidence of great painstaking in the keeping of these detailed records, and that the most improved methods used by financial institutions for the safety of the funds and completeness of the records are adopted wherever practicable.

The accounting affairs of the Association have been examined, which has proved the accuracy of the work in all the books; including the footings of the Cash Book, the cancelled checks compared with the entries and used as vouchers for the payments; the postings to the Ledger and reports published in "The American Missionary."

Certificates of balances to the credit of the Association obtained from the several Banks and Trust Companies, have in each instance agreed with the books of the Treasurer.

The amounts in the Trial Balance Sheet have been compared with the books, and the statement of Resources in the general Balance Sheet has been verified by a personal examination of the Securities by the Committee, in which I assisted.

I find the balance of last year $67,917.16 in the current fund account increased by $21,336.91, which is the excess of the payments over the receipts in this current year and makes the debit balance in this fund at the end of this year $89,254.07.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK C. MANVEL,
Certified Public Accountant of State of New York.

REPORT OF THE EASTERN DISTRICT—1904-05.

REV. GEORGE H. GUTTERSON, District Secretary.

The American Missionary Association maintains an office in Boston (Congregational House, Beacon Street, Room 615), in which three persons are employed, namely, George H. Gutterson, District Secretary; Mrs. Ida Vose Woodbury, Field Assistant; Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Cashier and Office Assistant.

This is a District Office and its work consists in general, in furnishing information concerning the wide and rapidly increasing work of the Association, by means of public addresses before churches, Sunday-schools, local missionary and Christian Endeavor Societies, Conferences, State Associations and various other organizations. Also through free distribution of illustrated and other literature describing the schools and churches and other missions of the A. M. A.

The Boston Office receives money and forwards it weekly to the Treasurer, Mr. H. W. Hubbard, at New York, whom it assists in the settlement of estates. Maps and stereopticon slides illustrating the several departments of the missionary work are kept in the Boston Office for the use of pastors and others who may require them. Fresh slides are being constantly added to the stock. Scores of ministers and laymen interested in the work and seeking means of interesting their churches in it, are welcomed to this office. This is helpful and cheering to those in the office and vital to the work, for no missionary organization can exist without the cordial co-operation of both pastors and laymen.

The following is a table of churches in the district sending a contribution for the last two fiscal years:

State.	1903-4.	1904-5.	Increase.	Decrease.
Maine	73	77	4	..
New Hampshire	80	110	30	..
Vermont	92	91	..	1
Massachusetts	404	414	10	..
Rhode Island	19	20	1	..
	668	712
Churches not sending a church contribution:
Maine	184	183	..	1
New Hampshire	108	78	..	30
Vermont	118	119	1	..
Massachusetts	206	197	..	9
	639	599		40

Forty-four more churches have contributed and the contributions amount of $615.36 increase this year over the last.

During the year considerable work has been done in the line of co-operation, in the collecting field, for example, Missionary Institute in which the American Board, the C. H. M. S., the A. M. A., the Church Building Society, the Congregational Education Society and C. S. S. and Pub. Society participated, was held in Maine, visiting some eight large places, from Portland to Belfast; meetings were held afternoon and evening, which were fairly attended and proved profitable. A series of meetings was also held by all the Societies in several important points in New Hampshire. Two series of Homeland Rallies, in which the Societies doing work in our own country alone, participated. A large number of places were visited, surrounding churches were called together, both pastors and laymen and superintendents of Sabbath Schools responding very heartily. The A. M. A. made a tour in the State of Vermont, and others are planned for the coming winter.

REPORT OF THE WESTERN DISTRICT—1904-05.

REV. W. L. TENNEY, D.D., District Secretary.

After representing the Association at the State Association of Wisconsin, North Dakota and Nebraska, a tour of several weeks was made in South Dakota, and through the helpful co-operation of the South Dakota Woman's Home Missionary Union, appointments were made for every day. More invitations have been received during the entire year than could be accepted. At least three men could devote all of their time to the service of the Association in this district, and then barely cover the field. Beginning early in March and continuing until July, I was in the field almost constantly, attending the majority of the local associations in Michigan and the State Associations of Michigan and Illinois. During the summer months, all the Sunday-school superintendents and pastors of the district were reached by correspondence, and a special appeal was made to individuals with some degree of success.

The chief obstacles in the way of a complete recognition by the churches of the importance of our work, seem to me to be as follows:

First. An apathy concerning the claims of Negro education on the part of many men of means. This may possibly be explained by the fact that the North and South are now in closer touch than ever before, and these men have been influenced by the superficial view of the race problem which obtains in the South among the noisy, but second-rate men, of the Dixon class.

Second. Individualism in benevolent work. There is a growing tendency, which is natural, for some of the friends of our societies, to push their peculiar claims as if they stood for the sole work of the denomination. The success of such efforts, is, I believe, in the end, but fictitious, but temporarily they disturb the balance of our denominational activity. I feel the need of a closer co-operation between the different departments of our denominational work and a more rational co-ordination in their efforts, and my feeling is but the reflection of the view of many of our most thoughtful and interested men.

Third. It is also true that the debt of the National Home Missionary Society, compelling a greater effort for self support, has in a large number of churches in this district, made it impossible to do what otherwise would have been done. If one of the members of our denominational body suffer, all as a natural corollary suffer as well. Considering these obstacles, the fact that one thousand and four churches in this district, either as churches or through some of their departments, sent offerings for our work, is encouraging.

The Chicago Association of churches, and the Iowa State Association, have recognized the weakness of our present system of "laissez faire" in benevolence and have this year made special efforts to bring about a better way. I believe that as a denomination we must soon be led to appreciate the truth that not only individuals, but societies, are "laborers together with God." Before closing my report, I desire to express my appreciation of the helpful co-operation of Dr. Woodbury, Mrs. Ida Vose Woodbury, and the "grand old man" of our Western Congregationalism, Dr. Roy.

The Program of the Kingdom of God.

SERMON

BY

REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Delivered at the Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, Worcester, Mass., October 17, 1905.

Text, Matt. 28: 18, 19, 20.

The program of the Kingdom of God is exceedingly clear and definite. It is in keeping with the fact that its great leader is the Light of the World. There was no vagueness or uncertainty in His own thought of the needs of humanity, and He made His own teaching so plain and simple, so well founded upon eternal principles true of all sorts and conditions of men, that His disciples need not for one moment have any hesitation concerning what the business of Christianity is. The splendid dogmatism of Christ is the glad heritage of His disciples. It is a fine thing to belong to an institution like the Kingdom of God, which knows what it is doing and why, which does not start with question marks of doubt, but with exclamation points of conviction. The glory of the Christian life has always been the presence of that conscious power which takes for granted a large number of hard questions definitely answered, a great many battles fought and won, and a vast amount of philosophy simplified into the most workable precepts. So all the great missionary enterprises of Christendom, wherever they have been truly great and forceful, have taken their beginning from the fact of positive certainty that Christ was the answer, not only to the individual need, but to the social structure of life and to the world as a whole.

This definite program of Christianity resolves itself into a campaign of righteousness based on the authority of Christ, the needs of mankind and the results which have been obtained. There is no more downright statement of absolute consciousness of power than is found in the words of Christ, "All authority has been given unto Me in Heaven and on earth." Do you think the consciousness of Jesus was more powerfully assertive as to His own being after the Resurrection than it was before? There is, at any rate, in the person of Jesus after He had been in paradise with the dying robber, an all-embracing atmosphere of personal power which is exceedingly significant. This authority upon which we rest, gives us, in the work of serving as redeemers for other men, great confidence and repose of spirit. To question the right of any one to tell us to go is to acknowledge our inability to win men to accept the authoritative voice which spake, is to fail to take the first step towards winning the world for Him.

But we are not left alone in the presence of a purely dogmatic statement of authority, with nothing else to guide us in our thought of the world's redemption. The needs of men are the same everywhere, under all conditions, and the things which Jesus told His disciples to teach, the things which He commanded, are essential to every life, whether the skin be white, or black, or red, or brown. It makes no difference. The inward need of humanity is the same everywhere. The fact of sin and the need of forgiveness and restoration, of healing and development are human facts. On the basis of these needs, the Son of God and the son of Mary lived and taught, and died and rose again. I see no difference in the real need of our brother, the Negro, in this country, or the Chinaman, or the Eskimo, or the Indian, the Italian, the Japanese, the Russian, the Scandinavian, or any man of any race who comes to make his physical home with us. These human needs are reduced to a common quantity, and the Christ who is the all and in all, the same yesterday and forever, is necessary to them all for the full development of their life, for their salvation as we say, meaning by that the saving of themselves from self for others, the redemption of their souls from the worship of the gods of this world, the making of them over into creatures who call God, Father, and man, brother.

And neither are we left with the authority of Christ to redeem the world and the need of men to be redeemed, but we have also, as the ages pass on, the results of obedience to the command. These are historical. We are fortunate above the men who listened to the voice of Christ, for our world contains to-day more disciples, more witnesses than were ever imagined by the eleven. And the results test the authority of Christ on the needs of the races. For Christianity has been tried on nearly every known race. If we could stand up here in this room a representative Christian from every race in the world, what a wonderful sight it would be to look in the faces of black and white, of red and brown and yellow, of those of different languages and tongues and climes and continents, who have come face to face with the Christ and called Him Master! Their faces would all look alike in spite of differences in color or shape of feature, for all true Christians bear in their faces the mark of the new name on the forehead. The results of obedience to the command to go and make disciples bear out therefore the dogmatism of the command. Authority, needs, and results, sum up the grand sum total of the entire program of Christianity. Being saved is vastly more than getting out of hell and into Heaven. Being saved consists in far more than that. It means getting other people out of self into Christ, making disciples of the nations working out the program of the kingdom.

The American Missionary Association has no parallel in the history of nations any more than the United States republic had any precedents to follow when it struck out its own declaration of national life. It is without historical precedent that a republic should receive within its borders and contain within them as possible nourishment or possible destruction a miscellaneous collection of people foreign to one another in speech, in custom and in religious habits. And it is altogether without parallel in the history of the world that a republic like this should find itself confronted with the problem of assimilation along lines of distinctive Christian development, for it seems that in the end nothing will answer the purpose for the salvation of the state under the wonderful conditions which are true of it, except that these forces should all become one in the Christian sense of brotherhood. In the solution of this most tremendous problem, this organization has come, born out of the stress of circumstances and with prophetic insight declaring from the first the need of Christianizing in order to save.

There are certain remarkable features connected with the work of this mission and of the church which demand and command attention. Take, for instance, the one factor of the Negro in America. We cite him because he is numerically the largest factor with which the Association has to do. His coming to us was not of his own accord. He is a foreigner on the soil, who, however, is willing to become a patriot and a fellow citizen. And there are certain well marked characteristics of the Negro as the Association deals with him as a human factor, which are exceedingly hopeful. He is pre-eminently a son of good cheer. Good soil this for the sowing of the gospel seed, which is good news, glad tidings. The racial disposition to look upon the sunny side of events, to take a cheerful view of life, which poverty and stress and hardship cannot rub out, is good soil. It is so much to start with. The sullen or morose, or sour or pessimistic feature of some few races is absent from the African. Add to that his natural inclination to be religious. I have never yet met a Negro who was an atheist or an infidel. The great work which confronts the Association is to shape this naturally religious life into the right channel, but that certainly is not a difficult task by the side of what might confront the problem of 9,000,000 people who were naturally irreligious. So much again to start with. And add to that also the fact of his imitative ability. I have watched the process in a kindergarten school where an equal number of white Anglo-Saxon children were given the same tasks which were given to Negro children, and the receptive imitative faculty was more largely developed in the Negro than the white. This is not a small item in the shaping of character. What is true of the Negro in this particular is also true of other races with which the Association has to do. It would be easy enough to spend an hour talking about the bad qualities of the Negro, the Chinaman, the Eskimo, or the Anglo-Saxon boodler, but that is not necessary here, for there are good qualities in all these classes of people, with the possible exception of the last. And the Association in carrying out its program of redemption, facing definitely the needs of these varied people, but recognizing calmly the fact that their needs are one and the same, should carry on its work recognizing all those things in these different races which are capable of rapid assimilation of the teachings of Christ. And right here one may be pardoned for noting the fact that racial differences are not by any means an insurmountable obstacle to the Christian brotherhood. There is no barrier which genuine Christian love of man for men cannot overcome. Race prejudice certainly is not such a tremendous thing that it need of necessity separate the people of a nation into two hostile camps or even into two separate and critical collections of people belonging nominally to the same community, but really existing apart. If all the Negroes in the South were Booker Washingtons, and all the white men in the South were John Greenleaf Whittiers there would be no race question any more. We simply come back at the last analysis to the place where Christ wishes us to begin. Perfect love casteth out fear. All of us are brothers. If a man is a real Christian, not a nominal one, he cannot create trouble for his brother. And all the races of the universe could subsist in a happy family within the compass of a republic far smaller geographically than ours if once their hearts were right in the sight of God and towards one another. When I was a small boy, living in Rhode Island, my father took me to a menagerie. I believe there was not even a circus attached to it. It was pure menagerie. The only thing I remember about it was a small collection of different animals which a young man had trained to live together. There was a cat, with a family of mice, a hawk, some chickens, I think two or three grown-up rats, several canaries and two or three dogs. They ate out of the same dish and traveled indifferently alike over one another and their trainer. So long as he was present, at any rate, there was no disturbance. He began with them as soon as they were born, and, while I did not draw the moral at the time, from this highly moral show, since then I have thought often of what might be done with the different races of the world if they were trained early enough to love and respect one another's rights and grow up together in the harmony of a great Christian brotherhood. We might as well face the question frankly and openly from the very basic foundation. This republic could not exist half slave and half free, according to the great President. Neither can it exist half Christian and half pagan. It must be all Christian or it will disintegrate. There is no process known to the schools, there is no divine healing in culture in itself, there is no fundamental erasion of these selfish racial prejudices outside of the gospel of Christ. Education does not necessarily remove the hatred of man for man, refinement does not in itself have anything to do with the softening of men's feelings for one another. The process of the world in the arts and sciences, in machinery, in the multitude of labor-saving devices, in the addition of pagan luxury to Christian necessity—all these things in themselves put together have not one iota's influence in changing the inevitable current of men's lives, of their feelings, their passions and their prejudices. Nothing will ever change the thought of the white man for the black man, or the black man for the white man, except when both become Christ's men. Then their viewpoint will be the same.

It is for the working out of these magnificent possibilities that this American Missionary Association exists. The Negro is simply an illustration of the other races with which the Association has to do. It is therefore with pardonable pride that those who believe in the power of the republic look with intense earnestness upon the work of any organization which like this bases its love of country upon principles of real Christian manhood and womanhood. This Association practically says to the United States Government, you may educate, you may elevate the different races by one course or another, through the public schools, through state universities, through libraries, musuems, art galleries, through the constant impress of the nation's greatness in its physical and social life, but these foreign races will rise up and choke the life out of you in the end, unless with all they have something more than the state can ever give, and that is the teachings of Christ implanted in the fiber, in the warp and woof of their thinking, of their creed, of their conduct. In other words, the A. M. A. in all its work is helping to make the United States Government a lasting and permanent institution among the nations of the earth by transforming the lives of its citizens out of race haters, out of mammon worshipers, out of worshipers of the gods of the senses in any form whatever, into obedient children of God fashioned after the pattern of the great Redeemer of all mankind. On that basis, and that alone, this republic can endure. On any other basis it will inevitably go the way of all the nations that have perished because they knew not, loved not, and served not the God of righteousness.

If the churches of the Congregational order in America really once understood throughout their entire membership the tremendous value and importance of this kind of patriotism, of this kind of nation-making, I do not understand how they could refuse to place this work near the head of the list in point of honor and importance. Somehow I get the impression that a good many of our churches are like department stores. You go into one of these great emporiums, go up to the counter and ask for a spool of thread, and the clerk says he has no thread at his counter, it is at the next counter or across the way; or you ask for stationery, and it is at some other counter. Each clerk has a very limited supply of material on hand. In a good many churches you will find people who are interested in some particular phase of Christian life. One man is interested in some phase of Bible study, and another is willing to teach a class in the Sunday-school, another man finds his enthusiasm going out towards the physical culture of a group of boys, but when these church members are approached on the question of missions they have no stock on hand. It is at some other counter in the female department. As I understand the teaching of Christ, every Christian is of necessity a missionary, and it is a misnomer to speak of a real church member who does not believe in missions. The word missions covers the entire activity of one man's soul for the good of another, whether it is in China or in Wall Street. But our churches are many of them dead to this great fact, and the missionary enthusiasm has no divine impulse at the heart. The thing is lacking sometimes because of lack of information, oftener because of lack of genuine Christian life. But there is always hope in the young. The finest thing that any pastor of any church can do is to gather his young people about him, beginning with the children in his Sunday-school, and tell them the story of missionary effort around the world, making a beginning of a class, even though it is only a small number, and teaching the absolute necessity for the church life to center about the missionary spirit. Out of a great many of our churches has gone the presence of the ideal. We are so afraid of looking into the future for the greatest possibilities that we fail to do the plain and practical things of the present.. When Emerson said, "Hitch your wagon to a star," he might have added, "and then get into the wagon." A good many of us hitch our wagons to stars and then stand off and look at them, and in the life of the church in the world the absence of a spiritual imagination which sees the possibility of great things actually done in the earth is keeping many a pastor and his people back in the place of the dull routine of habit, of custom and of commonplace.

One reason we are here, I take it, is to attempt the ideal in our earthly existence. The very statement of the program of the Kingdom of God includes of necessity this ideal rule of life. Certainly no man ever faced more discouraging conditions than did Jesus Christ, yet He wanted to hasten the millennium to such an extent that He did not hesitate to tell His disciples to be as perfect as God. The work of the American Missionary Association is avowedly work of set purpose to hasten the millennium, and in the practical details of that process, it ought to have and will undoubtedly have in growing measure the enthusiastic support of every church. There is more in that phrase, "Make disciples of the nations," than the church has so far grasped in its large and inclusive meaning. Making disciples of the nations that belong to the United States means more than making Republicans or Democrats, or Socialists or Prohibitionists out of them. It means more than making good farmers, carpenters, mechanics out of them. It means even more than making out of them men who respect the United States Government and obey to a large extent its laws. It means even more than making out of these different races loyal citizens who even go so far as to love the country, and if need be, die for it. Making disciples of the nations means transforming the life out of this world character into the other world. It means putting the stamp of Christ's inward personality into His motive and purpose in living, upon every one of these races. It is gigantic in the unfolding of its purpose, and it is well for us who belong to the church of Christ at the present time to consider whether it is in all particulars fit to bear the message of the Master, to these alien people unless its own life is more richly filled with the spirit of real discipleship. I was talking with a refined and cultured foreigner whom some people in America would call heathen, and he said frankly, "Why should I change my religion, into which I was born, for yours? When I look at the fruits of it in your churches, I do not see enough difference to make me willing to exchange many things which are dear to me in the religion of my father for what you call Christian. I find," he said, "very many of your church members are men who seem to be engrossed in the things of the world. They talk, 'money, money, money' all the time. They live extravagantly." He cited particular instances of men who were members of churches who were living on princely incomes, whose living came from what seemed to him like speculation or from physical conditions that would not bear the close scrutiny of the golden rule. And, without cynicism, or even bitterness, my friend the foreigner who had come to this country to make his home, was not eager in the least to embrace a religion the fruits of which seemed to him so little different from his own. Is it not a fair question for the church of Christ in America to ask whether it can expect to make disciples of nations very fast or with much enthusiasm unless first of all its own inward life will bear the test which Christ applied to His disciples, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven"? A Christian is a peculiar person, and he cannot expect to win the world unless he is peculiar. The entire question of personal luxury, of the possession of large income, of the expenditure of lavish amounts on one's physical, educational or artistic life—these questions the church of Christ and its membership ought not to be afraid to ask concerning itself. Especially do we need to cleanse our churches of all participation in worldly selfishness and greed before we can expect to make disciples of other people whose religion in some particulars at least may have given them certain traits of character which in themselves are admirable and worthy of imitation. One of the greatest hindrances I think to the evangelization of many of the foreign races in the great cities lies in the fact that representatives of Christianity whom these people see in our churches are not distinguished for the Christian virtues of humility, simplicity of living, or the cleanest and purest type of honor and unselfishness in their business and social relations with other men. I do not believe there is anything that could keep the different nations in New York or Chicago or Philadelphia or San Francisco, or any other great city in this country, from flocking in great crowds, hungering and thirsting after the truth, into the churches of Christ, if, as a rule, the representatives in the membership of all the churches in those cities were really and truly as a body living close to the heart of the Christian founder of the greatest religion in the world. And I can conceive of no greater handicap to be placed upon one of our missionaries at home or abroad than the handicap of an intelligent heathen being able to say, because the facts were so, that the fruits of Christian teaching in America did not bear out the value of Christianity as a religion to the rest of the world. Whatever were the faults of the disciples who first heard this command to make disciples, they had at least to start with some of the greatest and most essential Christian characteristics. They were willing to suffer physical privation. They certainly loved with tremendous enthusiasm the different races to which they appealed. They had the most unbounded confidence in the power of the divine to work through them. Types of them, like Peter and Paul, endured countless hardships to bring the glad news to those who had not heard it. On the basis of these tests, how near is the present church membership to the ideal of discipleship which is necessary before we can expect to make disciples. For we cannot expect to make disciples as men make politicians or partisans or tax payers. Making a disciple is a thing which goes into all the ramifications of heart religion, and it all depends at last upon the purity, the unselfishness, brotherly kindness of the ideal which men see in the living disciple who is the representative of the Christ. The church has also not only the sacred and necessary task of cleansing itself in order to make disciples, but it has the constant and necessary task of informing its own membership of the work of the kingdom. There are of course very many enthusiastic and well informed men and women in our churches concerning the work of the American Missionary Association, but there are hundreds and thousands of members in the Congregational churches of America who do not know anything about this great work of patriotism. Nearly every pastor has had the humiliating experience of having some otherwise well posted member of his church ask him at some time or other what was the difference between the American Missionary Association and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. How many members of our churches could pass an examination on the field of work covered by the Association? How many pastors even in Massachusetts or Connecticut would like to have their church members attempt this examination, with the understanding that the results would be an indication of the faithfulness with which the pastor had enlightened his people on the subject? For several years I have wished that our Sunday-school program for its year's study would contain a place for each one of our benevolent societies. It seems to me that it would be in keeping with the purpose of the Sunday-school, with its aim, to give definite and regular instruction to the children on the great work which the church is doing. The most practical method of instructing our congregations in the work of the kingdom is to have some living touch with the outposts of the work. A church which ten years ago was giving $40 a year to foreign missions is now giving $400, because it has a missionary of its own in a foreign country. The living tie has been a regular means of information and of greater enthusiasm on the part of a congregation that was indifferent concerning even the $40 it once thought was all it could raise. If we could only once impress upon our churches the necessity of having a missionary of their own to support, it would go far towards supplying the members with the information necessary, and this information must be contained within the membership or it will be as it always has been practically impossible to secure the money from the church. People as a rule in our churches do not give unless they know something about the object of the gift. The pastor is the man to inform the people. He is there for that purpose. But no less is it the duty of the member to acquaint himself in any case with the work of the great kingdom to which he belongs. It was the definite knowledge of the country in the neighborhood of Mukden which materially helped the Japanese generals to win that great battle. If history is correct in the matter, it was a lack of definite knowledge of a sunken road in the plain of Waterloo that lost that battle to Napoleon. If some man in one of our Congregational churches will devise some plan by which the membership of the churches can be informed concerning the great and growing work of this Association, he will become famous through that one thing as possibly through no other. At the heart of the thing, however, lies this great fact with every church member, if he is really a child of the kingdom, if he belongs to it and has the divine passion of enthusiasm, he will not be satisfied until he knows the facts in the case as far as possible concerning all the energy of that kingdom as men are directing it. I was in a Methodist church in Northern Michigan a few years ago where the membership was made up almost entirely of Cornish men, miners in the iron mines. The young Methodist preacher had just been called to the place from another locality where evidently from his remarks the people were not in the habit of going to church. As we sat behind the pulpit waiting for the hour of service, and my young brother noted the streams of men coming into the building, he leaned over and whispered to me, saying, "It beats everything how these people up here go to church. They go to church in spite of everything I can do." Learning afterward something concerning this brother's pulpit ministrations, it added force to his remark, for the people were in the habit of attending church for public worship, and the preaching was not the greatest thing which drew them there. Some of the rank and file of our church membership is composed of real Christian disciples, and in spite of everything the pastor can do or not do, they will find out something about the work of the Kingdom of God. As a rule, however, the old adage, "Like priest, like people," holds, and it is the great privilege of the ministry to lead his people. Six times a year, at any rate, he should find occasion to preach informing sermons on the facts of missionary work as being now carried on by the church at home and abroad, supplementing his preaching by the largest possible scattering of the best literature on the subject among his people. We of the pulpit are very often tempted to prepare too many great sermons, whereas three-fourths of our pulpit ministration should be in the nature of teaching our people about the kingdom in a quiet and unobtrusive, and I would like to say unoratorical, way. I would like to predict that the most successful future ministry of the near future will consist in that kind of service, where a man is willing to sink his ambitions for the reputation of being a great preacher and enter upon the less renowned but more fundamental work of teaching the people the great things which are fundamental to the building up of the Kingdom of God in a parish. Not one minister in a thousand has any oratorical gifts to start with. Every one of the thousand, if he is at all fit to be in the ministry, could, however, be a teacher of the Word, and our pulpits in America are suffering to-day from lack of real teachers more than from any other one thing.

As I have already said, the hope of the ministry in this particular rests with the young. However impossible the other people in our churches may be, there is resident in the children a possibility of enthusiastic knowledge, which is the one inspiring thing to keep a man going in the ministry all the days of his life. I have always deplored the way in which we miss our opportunity with our Sunday-schools. Instead of preaching so many sermons to grown-up people, we ought to be preaching at least half the year to our Sunday-schools. The best audience in the house goes when the Sunday-school is dismissed and walks home, and older people come into the church building to take their place in the preaching service. I would like to suggest as a practical thing, that some young minister who is not afraid of experiments, go home from this Association and say to his people, "I want to teach my Sunday-school for six months the great things of the kingdom which belong to the life of the church. You older people can come if you want to." And if he says that they will come anyway. "But give me my children in order that I may train them while they are young and enthusiastic to know these great things." We are as a nation in throes of questions concerning the best way to observe Fourth of July and Christmas and Thanksgiving. I have not yet seen any program, for instance, concerning the most Christian way to observe the Fourth of July, but people are dissatisfied with the way in which the day is now celebrated. It is not beyond the reach of possibility that some who are not afraid of trying to hasten the millennium, some ministers and pastors, will yet even in this old commonwealth observe the Fourth of July by a program which will contain somewhere within it the essence of the practical patriotism which the American Missionary Association is trying to put into the hearts of the Negro, the Eskimo, the Chinaman and the man in Porto Rico. It is at least not forbidden a Christian disciple to entertain such an ideal as that, and it would be an ideal if the church of Christ once grasped the significance of this great program of the kingdom, "Make disciples of the nations," in order that the nation which we love may be a godlike thing among the nations of the world. It is a truism and cannot be said in any new way that America is the greatest experiment in self government the world has ever seen. If this self government shall freely resolve itself into a government of individual Christians by Him who is Lord of Lords, then we shall have fulfilled our mission among the people of the earth. How to impress our children with the greatness of this all-conquering program, that is one question. How to become ourselves a better example of the fruit of a religion which we preach is another question. How to face the particular difficulties which different conditions present, is another question. But all of these are answered by obedience to the plain command of our Lord. In other words, after we have summed up all, we are joyfully content to return to the great and growing fact that what we are trying to do is done with the divine strength to eke out our human weakness. The task before us seems gigantic. It is no less than the attempt to take an unformed, ignorant, sinful, in some cases, debauched and degraded, humanity of different tongues and races, ancestry and training, and shape it all over into refined, enthusiastic, useful, pure, enlightened Christian discipleship, to make strong the welfare of the republic, to love God and man with eagerness, in other words, to become through and through Christ-like. Compared with the attempt to make artisans or farmers or musicians or politicians out of the material which comes to us from every climate, the work of the American Missionary Association is simply superhuman, and it would be impossible if it were not for this constant fact of the authority and power of Him who bids us do it. "All authority," He says, "has been given unto Me." But in another place He gives us the assurance that this authority belongs to us. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," and it is in the divine assurance that this same power which the Master claimed for Himself is also ours with Him, that we undertake the glorious work of changing men's lives, for the good of the republic and the greater good of the world. The Kingdom of God is not a vague thing. It is the most real of all things because it is something within us. We are not certain of the outward and the physical things. They are constantly changing. The old textbooks that once told me that air was a viewless gas are not printed any more, not since the professor began to throw liquid air around like snowballs, but the things of the inner life all remain the same. They are the reality of existence, and the Kingdom of God is within us. It is that kingdom within men which we are to establish here on the earth. And this great Association going out to those different races, kindreds, tongues and people, carrying the message of a divine master, of a kingdom which is to be established here on the earth, does so with courage because it realizes the work is not merely human. It is more than statecraft of men to build up this kingdom. Strange as it may seem, the republic of the United States cannot endure without the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. But give us the kingdom within the hearts of these people and we may be sure of the endurance of the republic. Let us go therefore with knowledge of what it means to all the different races within our great land and make disciples of them, realizing that it means more than surface emotion stirred through some religious excitement, that it means complete transformation and renewal and rebirth of the entire nature, including purposes, motives, passions, conduct, at the heart of all of which there is found resident the regnant and loving Christ of God, and let us pray also that our churches may receive such a baptism from the spirit of God that they may realize what has been done even with imperfect and weak hands of men where it has been done out of love for Him, and with added knowledge and with growing enthusiasm may it carry on the work which shall eventually, we believe, transform the things which make for wrongs and prejudices and race hatred into a harmony of living hearts of men that have but one real passion and one real love, summed up in the great desire that the Kingdom of God might come and His will be done on earth even as it is in Heaven. "And lo," He says, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

BRIEF HISTORY.

Organization. The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846. It is distinctively a Christian missionary society to spread the gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity. It was organized with pronounced opposition to slavery, which then existed, and against all race and caste prejudice, which still exists. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the Amistad Committee, the Union Missionary Society, the Committee for West India Missions among the recently emancipated slaves of Jamaica, and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society for work among the American Indians.

In the foreign field, in 1854, its laborers numbered seventy-nine, located in West Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt among the Copts, Canada among the colored refugees and in North America among the Indians.

The home departments embraced two distinct fields, the West and the South. There were 112 home missionaries employed by the Association in 1860, fifteen of them being located in the slave states and in Kansas.

The missions in the slave states gave rise to some of the most stirring events in the history of the Association, which has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts, while slavery existed, to organize churches and schools in the South on an avowedly anti-slavery basis.

Among the Negroes. The crisis so long impending came at length, and the Union armies, entering the South in 1861, opened the way for the instruction and elevation of the colored people. The Association felt itself providentially prepared to engage in this work, and the first systematic effort for their relief was made by it. Large numbers of "contrabands," or escaping fugitive slaves, were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, Va., and were homeless and destitute. The Association, on the 17th of September, 1861, established the first day-school among the freedmen. That little school laid the foundation for the Hampton Institute which the Association founded later, and was the forerunner of the hundreds that have followed.

The Proclamation of Emancipation, dated January 1, 1863, insured the permanent freedom of Negroes who reached the Union lines. The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Norfolk the school of the previous year now numbered 1,200 pupils. Teachers were also sent to Newbern and Roanoke Island, N. C., to Beaufort, Hilton Head, St. Helena and Ladies' Island, S. C., and to St. Louis, Mo., and its force was scattered over the field held by our armies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.

Close of the War. Freedmen's Bureau. Boston Council. The year 1865 was marked by the close of the Civil War, by the establishment, by act of Congress, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the holding of a National Council of Congregational Churches in Boston, which recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted to carry it forward. The Association accepted the responsibility, appointed district secretaries at Chicago, Cincinnati and Boston, and collecting agents in other portions of the Northern states. It also solicited funds in Great Britain, and succeeded in securing that year a little more than the $250,000 recommended by the Council. Its receipts from all sources ran up from $47,828 in 1861 to $253,045 in 1866, and $420,768 in 1870.

But in the South there came a reign of terror under the infamous Ku-Klux-Klans—the Thugs of America. The colored people were often assaulted by mobs, dragged from their homes at midnight, and shot down in the streets. But there was no want of courage on the part of our teachers to enter or remain in the field; the number of teachers, which was 320 in 1865, was enlarged to 528 in 1867, 532 in 1868, and 533 in 1870.

Permanent Educational Institutions. It was during this very period that the beginnings were made for most of our permanent educational institutions. The Association must train the teachers and preachers for this people.

The Association now sustains as higher institutions: Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas, and Piedmont College, Georgia, together with forty-eight normal and graded schools and sixteen common schools scattered over the South and among the mountains, one school among the Indians, twenty among the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific Coast, one in Alaska and one in Porto Rico. Educational and church work has also been entered upon in Hawaii.

Theological departments have also been maintained in Howard University, Talladega College, Straight University, Fisk University and Atlanta Seminary. Industrial instruction first began in Southern mission schools in Talladega, Ala., and was early introduced into many of our schools and has been constantly extended. Talladega College, Tougaloo University and Joseph K. Brick Normal School have large farms. In all the larger institutions and normal schools mechanical arts are taught to the boys, and household work, cooking, sewing, washing, nursing, etc., to the girls. From these schools go forth annually hundreds of well-qualified teachers and ministers.

Church Planting. Simultaneously with the founding of these permanent institutions the Association began the planting of churches among the freedmen. They were formed mainly in connection with the educational institutions, and were intended to be models of true church life. The work of church planting has been pressed forward with a steady hand until the churches now number 233, located in nearly all the states of the South, among the Negroes, the Highlanders, the Indians and Chinese in the West, with most fruitful results. Sunday-schools, temperance efforts and revivals of religion have been marked features in the work. Christian Endeavor Societies were promptly organized and have been rapidly multiplied.

Mountain Work. The early labors of the Association in home mission work were directed to the white people of the West and South. The mountain region of the Central South embraces West Virginia, southwestern Virginia, southeastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee and portions of northern Georgia and northern Alabama. It is 500 miles long and 200 miles wide, and contains a population of about 2,000,000, seven-eighths of whom are white. Churches, preaching stations and schools have been established along or near the line of railroads traversing the mountain districts, or in regions not yet reached by such communications, where thousands of Highlanders live. Schools, churches and missions are now established in the mountain regions of five Southern states. The schools give prominence to normal and industrial training, sending out each year a large number of well-trained teachers, who, taking charge of the district schools, are making them over after the best models. Strategic points are occupied by these institutions, such as Williamsburg, Ky.; Grand View and Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Joppa, Ala.; Saluda and Whittier, N. C. The preaching of an intelligent gospel and the establishment of Sunday-schools, Mission Bands, Mothers' Circles and Christian Endeavor Societies contribute greatly to the development of these interesting Highlanders in their domestic and social life as well as that distinctively religious.

The Indians. Some of the earliest labors of the Association were among the Indians. In 1852 it had twenty-one missionaries stationed among the Indians of the Northwest. Various causes conspired to the gradual diminution of these missions. But in 1882 an arrangement was made with the American Board by which it transferred to the Association its Indian missions in this country, and the Association withdrew from missions in foreign lands. At the time of the transfer the Association had missions in Skokomish, Wash., Leach Lake, Minn., and Spokane Falls. The transfer from the Board committed to its care the mission and school at the Santee Agency, Neb., Oahe, S. D., with outlying stations on the Cheyenne and White Rivers, and the mission and school at Fort Berthold, N. D. Since these missions and schools came under the care of the Association the facilities and force of workers have been increased, and missions have been added at Fort Yates, N. D.; Rosebud, S. D., and the Crow Agency, Mont. The churches number twenty-two, with a membership of 1,629. Schools number one, with 208 pupils. The out-stations number sixty.

Alaska. Our Alaskan Mission at Cape Prince of Wales was formed in 1890. It it now entirely supported by the special contributions sent to our treasury for this purpose. In connection with the educational and mission work a herd of reindeer is in the care of a missionary. The report of our missionaries in Alaska presents a very hopeful picture of work among the Eskimos.

Chinese and Japanese in America. The American Missionary Association was one of the pioneers in mission service among the Chinese immigrants to California. It began the work as early as 1852. In 1874 Dr. W. C. Pond, pastor of the Bethany Church, San Francisco, was appointed superintendent.

The number of workers is fifty-nine, and schools twenty, located at Berkeley, Fresno, Los Angeles, Marysville, Oakland, Oroville, Pasadena, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Ventura and San Francisco.

Over a thousand of these pagans have come into the Christian life, and a number of them have returned to their native land as missionaries.

The converted Chinamen have long desired the establishment of missions in their native country, to which, if they should return thither, they might resort as a Christian home, and from which they might go forth for mission work among their countrymen. The Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions, and which was organized in 1886, and commenced work in China in 1890, has already contributed above $15,000 to missions in China. With this they have established headquarters at Canton with property worth $40,000. They have also property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty years' lease of a good chapel in Ci Ning City, where they have organized a church.

Porto Rico. The American Missionary Association follows the flag. It did this in the Civil War, bringing the blessing of Christian instruction to the Negroes. It followed the same course at the close of the war with Spain. Porto Rico came under the flag and became a part of the national territory. The responsibility for the Christian instruction of the people fell with especial force upon our American churches. The American Missionary Association carefully investigated the field through representatives who were sent to the island. The need was found to be very great. There was an immediate demand for well appointed Christian schools for the instruction of children and youth and also for the preaching of a broad and free gospel to the people. In 1899 eight teachers were sent to this field to establish and maintain these schools, and an evangelist to preach the gospel as widely as possible throughout the island. Four churches, with 494 members, are now organized.

Blanche Kellogg Institute is located at Santurce, near San Juan, a strategic position for a large work. The pastors also hold a circuit of preaching stations through the eastern portion of the island, where there are scarcely any other missionary efforts. There is great need for increased income to the Association to met the demands of this large and growing field.

Hawaiian Islands. The Association, in 1904, by the urgent request of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, undertook to aid the latter in its entire work among the native Hawaiians, and the Chinese, and Japanese, in those islands. To meet the imperative demands of this important work the A. M. A. has pledged for this year the sum of $8,000.00. These demands will be seen from the following facts. The Hawaiian Islands consist of a group of eight inhabited and four uninhabited islands. They are situated 2,100 miles from San Francisco and 3,400 miles from Japan. The people of Hawaii are made up of native Hawaiians, about 40,000; Chinese, 25,767, and Japanese, 61,111. In religion the population is divided as follows: Buddhists, 40,000; Mormons, 4,886; Roman Catholics, 26,363; Protestants, 23,773. The Hawaiian Islands seem to have been providentially situated so as to form the training school of missionaries for the Orient. In the providence of God many Chinese and Japanese have settled here. Back of this work in Hawaii there lies the great field of missions in China and Japan. There is also every inducement possible in the line of home missionary responsibility to support generously this work in our new island territory. This is the gateway to Asia and means great things in the regeneration of that vast region.

Bureau of Woman's Work. Formed in 1883. It gives direction and efficiency to the various lines of womens' aid to the American Missionary Association. Women's State Missionary Unions and organizations co-operate in raising funds for the prosecution of the work of the Association.

Publications. The American Missionary magazine is issued in ten monthly numbers by this Association each year. It contains fresh information from the mission fields, the reports of importance of various committees and other matters of value to those studying these great mission fields. The magazine is published at fifty cents per year. It is generously illustrated, and presents in new form fresh material in each issue.

Congregational Work, the organ of all our Congregational societies, represents each month the work of the American Missionary Association.

A large number of interesting leaflets, bringing the most recent information obtainable, are also pubished. They are issued for general use and distributed as desired among those interested in these great national and religious problems.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SEC. 1. William E. Whiting, Thomas Ritter, Henry Belden, James O. Bennett, Anthony Lane, Thomas C. Fanning, Samuel Wilde, C. B. Wilder, John Lowry, Josiah Brewer, William B. Brown, Alonzo S. AIM, WORK AND FIELD.

To preach the gospel to the poor. It originated in a sympathy with the almost friendless slaves, and in its work recognizes no distinction of race or color. Since emancipation, it has devoted its main efforts to the South, endeavoring to prepare the NEGROES for their duties as citizens and Christians in America, and as missionaries in Africa. It also establishes missions and schools among the WHITES, especially in the mountain districts. As closely related to this, it seeks to benefit the CHINESE and JAPANESE in America, and to extend the blessings of the gospel and civilization to the INDIANS of North America. It conducts churches, schools and missions in Alaska, Porto Rico and Hawaii. In view of the necessity of elevating the WOMEN of these races, the Association has a BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK, to which it especially invites the co-operation of the Christian women of the churches.

MEMBERSHIP.

A payment of THIRTY DOLLARS will constitute a person a life member. (See Article III of the Constitution.)

LEGACIES.

Important legacies have been lost to the Association by informality. Care should be taken to give full name, "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION." The following form of bequest may be used:

I GIVE AND BEQUEATH the sum of———dollars to "The American Missionary Association," incorporated by act of Legislature of the State of New York.

The will should be attested by three witnesses (in some states three are required—in other states only two), who should write against their names their places of residence (if in cities the street and number). The following form of attestation will answer for every State in the Union: "Signed, sealed, published and declared by the said (A. B.,) as his last will and testament in the presence of us, who at the request of said (A. B.,) and in his presence, and in the presence of each other have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses." In some states it is required that charitable bequests should be made at least two months before the death of the testator; but this rule does not apply to bequests in the State of New York to this Association.

To the American Missionary Association:

Your Finance Committee submits the following report:

The method of keeping the accounts and of handling the funds of the Association has been examined with care. The Committee can only commend the system in use for many years in the Treasurer's office. Every safeguard known to good business practice is used in the accounting of all receipts and expenditures, and so carefully have the endowment funds been invested that there have been no losses; all the funds are to-day intact, and most of them show an increase in value from the time of their establishment.

The report for this year is most gratifying.

The current receipts for the year are $423,627.21, an increase of $81,454.99 over the income of the previous year.

The expenditures of the year are $402,285.75, an increase of $38,776.62, over the outlay of the previous year. The debt which was $89,254.07, at the beginning of the fiscal year is now $67,912.61, a reduction of $21,341.46.

In analysing the receipts we notice with great satisfaction that the income from the living,—churches, societies and individuals, which last year amounted to $161,548.08, this year has increased to $182,808.08, a net gain of $21,260.00.

The legacies also have increased from $106,047.97 to $147,108.71, a gain of $41,060.74.

The wisdom of the Executive Committee in establishing the reserve legacy fund is shown more and more each year.

In looking over the expenditures it is worthy of notice that the increase of $38,776.62, has been put into buildings and equipments, which are permanent additions to the assets of the Association.

In general, the financial record for the year will encourage every friend of the Association and its work. Nevertheless, it is the most earnest hope of the Finance Committee that the year upon which we are entering will show still greater causes for thanksgiving.

The work is increasing, the demands are more insistent, and new opportunities call for still greater efforts and sacrifice on the part of every lover of the grand old Association still young and vigorous, although it has passed its sixtieth year.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN R. ROGERS,
WILLIAM W. MILLS,

Resolutions.

The following resolutions, presented by Rev. Wm. Hayes Ward, N. Y., were adopted:

Resolved, That the delegates and other representatives of the churches gathered in this sixtieth annual meeting of the A. M. A. at Oberlin, O., urge upon churches and benevolent persons throughout the country the necessity of making every possible effort to increase the income of the Association during the year now beginning. We resolve that not less than $250,000 from living donors be the goal of our immediate endeavor. We affirm that the work of the A. M. A. involves the redemption and preservation of our nation as well as the progress of the Kingdom of God, and, therefore, rightly claims the generous interest and hearty support of all Christians and patriots. We believe that this year the A. M. A. should have a foremost place in the benevolence of the churches. We, therefore, earnestly request that "Forefathers' Day," or the Sunday preceding or following that day, be set apart for special offerings to increase immediately the income of the Association.

Resolved, That the A. M. A. views with deep anxiety the evidences of race discord in certain sections of our country. We lament acts of lawless violence which bring disgrace upon our nation. We urge those of negro blood to show patient courage and faith in God, while earnestly fighting both ignorance and crime, by the inculcation of thrift, education and religion; and we heartily rejoice in the increasing effort of the best white citizens to create a powerful sentiment which will maintain the rule of law.

Resolved, That the rapid influx of Japanese and Koreans into Hawaii and our Pacific States creates a condition which calls for enlarged missionary work, and for the concerted effort of our various missionary organizations to bring to them the blessings of our Christian faith.

Whereas a protest has come from influential citizens of Japan against the exclusion of Japanese children from the public schools of San Francisco:

Therefore, Resolved, That we deeply regret that any such exclusion should be attempted, and we would enter our plea in behalf of these children of Oriental race, that they may receive everywhere the same equal treatment as is now accorded to the four thousand Japanese children in the public schools of the Territory of Hawaii.

Remembering that the Continent of Africa was for years the scene of the earliest mission work of the Association, we most earnestly rejoice in the work of many missionary organizations which are trying to carry Christian civilization to the natives of Africa; and we equally deplore the injustice and cruelty which have been inflicted upon the Africans in the Kongo Free State and in South Africa, and we also offer our hearty sympathy to the efforts to exclude, by international agreement, debasing liquors and drugs from the native peoples.

Addresses.

Addresses were delivered as follows: by the Hon. T. E. Burton, D. C., upon "The Need of the Day," and by Rev. Dan F. Bradley, Ohio, upon "Certain Significant Contrasts."

Resolution of Thanks.

The following resolution of thanks was presented and adopted:

Gathered as we are at the Sixtieth anniversary of the American Missionary Association, the guest of a college and community whose early struggles and heroic development are so closely interwoven with the story of the Association as to render the history of each incomplete without the history of the other, we feel that merely formal resolutions are as much out of place as they would be where two members of the same family bid each other good-bye.

We know that for a small community, already overcrowded, to play the part of host to such a body of guests as are in attendance upon this meeting, has meant much inconvenience and personal sacrifice. But your hospitality has been princely, and we will long carry with us the memory of the kindly graciousness with which you have ministered to our comfort.

We have deeply appreciated the welcome extended to us by the churches of the community and the state. Your committees have met us at every turn when our feet were in danger of straying from the way, and their patience has been limitless, as by our frequent questionings we have put it to the test.

It has been a privilege for us to become more intimately acquainted with the faculty and students of Oberlin College. The spirit of interest and sympathy shown by both could not have been more cordial in the old days when Oberlin was in the front of the abolition ranks.

We must ever be the debtors of the Conservatory of Music for their rendering of the works of the masters, and thanks are due in particular to Dr. Andrews for the magnificent composition dedicated to the Association, a composition which revealed the genius of a master of his art. As we listened to the rendering of Dr. Andrews' we felt that we were listening to that which a larger public would yet regard as one of the great American masterpieces.

We thank the Fisk Quartet not simply because they have added to our pleasure, but because they have touched our hearts and made us better. Nor can we separate without thanking the newspapers, especially the "Oberlin News," for the aid which they have rendered by giving greater publicity to the strong words which have been spoken upon this platform.

The railroads, by their concessions, have also contributed to the success of this meeting, and deserve our gratitude.

As we leave, we give you all, town, churches and college, our sincerest "God bless you." May Oberlin stand in the days of stress which are now upon us and which are to come, as she did in the "brave days of old," for man as man, whatever his color or his degradation, the son of the Divine Father, whatever the prejudices or the selfish interests of the masses may say, always our brother; always making his appeal to us in the name of the Christ; always awakening the Divine in us as we respond. Then shall we together continue to fight the good fight and not believe that our course is finished until the Golden Rule of Jesus and the axioms of the Declaration of Independence have become a part of the very warp and woof of our national life.

Upon motion by Secretary W. L. Tenney, it was unanimously voted: That we accept the above words as an expression of our appreciation and gratitude for the generous hospitality of Oberlin.

Minutes.

The minutes, having been approved by the Executive Committee, are published upon their recommendation.

Attendance.

The Recording Secretary reported having received certificates from 375 persons, of whom 170 were delegates from churches; 12, delegates from local conferences; 14, delegates from state associations; 74, life members, and 144 visitors.

Closing Address.

The closing address was given by Vice-President William F. Slocum, upon "Education, the only Solution," who also pronounced the benediction.

The Association adjourned.

ASHER ANDERSON,
Recording Secretary.

SIXTIETH ANNUAL REPORT
OF THE
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1906.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The American Missionary Association entered upon its sixtieth year with no little solicitude. In the face of widening opportunity and importunate need on its mission fields, it had long practised a rigid and repressive economy. Its work was prospering and demanded re-enforcements, but for three consecutive years and in spite of repeated cuts in our schedule of appropriations we had reported deficits until the burden of debt weighed heavily upon us. Further retrenchment was therefore ordered, especially in administrative expenses, and an appeal was sent forth to the friends of the Association for increased donations. Like the ancient restorer of Jerusalem, "We made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch. So we labored in our work."

The result has been encouraging. There have been other strenuous appeals before the churches and our hopes have not been altogether realized. It is, however, with profound gratitude that your Committee are able to report a very considerable excess of receipts over expenditures during the year, and, notwithstanding large unanticipated expenses for buildings and repairs, the recent recurring deficit has been overcome and the debt of the Association has been reduced more than twenty thousand dollars. We thank God and take courage!

The work was never more interesting, insistent or important than it is to-day. It is interesting because of its diversity; it is a work both evangelistic and educational, among eight distinct races, in our own land. It is insistent, because of the rapidly changing social conditions under which it is being carried forward; delay is dangerous; the opportunities of the present will not recur in the future. It is vastly important, because of what it means to the life of the nation and to the extension of those principles of human brotherhood whose final triumph will be the coming of the kingdom of God among men.

During the past year your Committee have been compelled to give special consideration to those changes in social conditions which affect our work. Such changes are going on to a greater or less extent in each one of our various mission fields. Far-distant Alaska is losing its isolation; Anglo-Saxon civilization is advancing toward the Behring Sea, and miners from Tin City are attending our Eskimo mission meetings at Cape Prince of Wales. On the Pacific Coast an entirely new problem is presented by the immigration of tens of thousands of Japanese; our California Chinese Mission is asking for a complete reorganization of its work among Asiatics in the Pacific states, and the catastrophe at San Francisco, with the destruction of mission property, has raised the question of union in this work, or at least in some forms of it, between the denominations. In our Indian fields the establishment of Government schools has already compelled changes in missionary methods, with more exclusive emphasis on evangelistic effort, church work and the training of a native ministry; and now comes the distribution of lands in severalty, with the gradual breaking up of the Reservation and the scattering of the Indians over wider areas, thus calling for new preaching stations and making it more difficult than ever to reach the people at the very time when they most need the influence of the missionary and of regular religious instruction. In the Hawaiian Islands, a new population, oriental and pagan, creates a condition which calls for immediate attention. In Porto Rico, the American occupation, introducing new ideas and new enterprises, affords a unique and rapidly passing opportunity to bring the gospel of Christ to bear upon the island during the time of its political and industrial transformation. Everywhere these changes are going on, and are calling for a quick response and the wise adjustment of our work.

This is especially true in the South. The presence of the two races in the southern states has been and will doubtless long continue to be a source of irritation and danger. One race is weak and the other is strong; one is struggling to cast off the inherited disabilities of generations of bondage, the other is self-assertive in its sense of mastery, conscious of its power and proud of its superiority. There is small sympathy between them, and the breach is widening. The weaker race has made commendable progress in intelligence and capacity. Entering into freedom forty years ago absolutely penniless and illiterate, it now pays taxes upon hundreds of millions of property and has reduced its illiteracy by more than one-half; and yet the advance of education has not kept pace with the increase of population and there are more illiterate Negroes in the South to-day than there were in 1865. This ignorant mass is a menace to civilization; and yet the prejudice of the white man extends to the most cultivated person who betrays the slightest trace of Negro blood and is often intensified in proportion to that person's advancement in intelligence and self-respect. How are two such races to live together? Prof. Münsterberg is not alone in the opinion that the condition thus created furnishes the most serious and threatening problem with which the American nation is confronted. What dire result shall follow, it is impossible to predict, unless reason and justice, forbearance and self-control, mutual confidence and respect shall finally prevail.

Instead of this, however, during the past few years a change for the worse has suddenly set in—a change in the direction of unreason and injustice, of distrust and violence and mutual hate. "Nicholas Worth," in his "Autobiography of a Southerner," reviewing this passionate and irrational reaction against the Negro, which he attributes to the influence of unprincipled politicians, exclaims: "There is a dark and unfathomable abyss of race-feeling. While I write, my hope recedes, and the pathos of my country deepens. A large part of the southern people have persuaded themselves that the Negro must be kept to a level reminiscent of slavery, forgetting that on this level he can be only a burden. He will forever remain a burden if he is repressed and left without training."

This last, the American Missionary Association fully believes. Almost from the beginning of its history, sixty years ago, this Association has maintained churches and schools in the southern states. It has been the friend of both races and has endeavored to serve them both. Its first work in the South was for the whites—a work which it still cherishes and would gladly extend indefinitely. But since their emancipation, by far the largest part of its work has been, as it ought to have been, for the freedmen and for the children of the freedmen, and that because of their infinitely greater need, their helplessness and dependence. In this work it welcomes the co-operation and sympathy of the best white people of the South and it relies upon the high character and good sense of the best colored people of the South. It would meet present adverse conditions by allying itself with the best men of both races for the good of all. Its work is constructive and Christian. It teaches reverence, moral obligation and Christian faith; it seeks to supplant ignorance with intelligence, prejudice with consideration, race hatred with brotherly love. This is what its schools and churches are for. It is carrying forward this work with great confidence and a good hope. "If the bigness of the task," says "Nicholas Worth," "is appalling, and the time to do it indefinitely longer than our day of labor, so have all men found all grave social problems."

WHITE SCHOOLS.

Number of institutions	10
Number of instructors	79
Number of pupils	2,128
Boarding pupils	497

Our system of schools in the South extends from Virginia to Texas and from Kentucky to Florida. It includes all varieties of institutions, from the little three-month primary school in the country taught by the minister or his wife which supplements the four-month public school, up to the well-equipped university, such as is described and appealed for by a distinguished professor of anthropology and critic of Negro education in the last number of "The Century."

Our Highland schools approximate more nearly to a common type. The demand in the mountains still continues for normal and boarding schools and the tendency is toward a higher grade of culture. There is also a call for industrial training. Instruction in the agricultural and mechanic arts and domestic science should be given in all these mountain schools where it has not received the attention which has been accorded it further South. We greatly need the money for this purpose. Skyland Institute, Blowing Rock, N. C., is still closed for lack of funds, and should be re-opened. Our boarding schools at Saluda, Grand View, Pleasant Hill, Evarts and Nat, have all had a prosperous year. Highland College at Williamsburg, Ky., has passed a crisis in its history. Under its new president, Dr. George A. Hubbell, and with a fine new recitation hall and an advanced curriculum, it is now more prosperous and promising than ever before. The president and dean of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., are working with an energy and devotion which should be speedily rewarded with success, for the much needed endowment of the institution. Atlanta Theological Seminary, with limited means at its disposal, is courageously pursuing its task of sending forth a trained ministry to the white churches of the South. It has a strong faculty, an earnest body of students and great possibilities.

In our educational work among the colored people, the past year has not been without its encouraging tokens of prosperity and good will. The ambition of the Negro to obtain for himself a good all-round education and so better his condition and improve his chances in life, does not diminish. The nobler aspiration to prepare himself more adequately for the service of his people, is everywhere apparent, especially among the students of our higher institutions. Of the more than 15,000 pupils, white and black, in our southern schools, less than one-fifth are above the grammar grades. We do not think the number disproportionate; and yet, if the Negro race is to have wise and able leadership in these difficult times, if it is to have men and women of character, with high ideals of morality and integrity, to withstand the tendencies to vice and crime inevitable among a primitive and untrained people, such men and women must be the product of our missionary schools, where the education is soundly Christian and is broad enough and high enough to fit them for their place.

A recent action of your Committee, which arouses great hopes for the coming years, is the appointment of a Superintendent of Education for the South. Dr. Douglass has not yet entered upon his work, but he has already given testimony upon this point. He attended last summer, at our request, a religious and educational Congress of Negroes, and this is his report of it: "Its most heartening evidence was the men themselves. Sanity and cheerfulness dominated. They were pervaded by a deep sense of growth from within in power and patience. No one could doubt the genuine leadership of the movers of the Congress, nor the developing capacity of the people for organization and working in harness. Best of all, was the splendid outburst of foreign missionary enthusiasm for Africa, a high sense of privilege pledging itself to service. All in all," he says, "as the Congress showed, the Negro is adding to good temper leadership, to leadership wealth, to wealth culture, to culture consecration. What race can do more?" This same testimony comes from all over the South. Dr. Booker T Washington voiced it at the recent anniversary of Fisk University when he claimed that "in a most emphatic degree the entire nation owed a debt to this institution," and he urged the claim on the ground, that "few people realize to what extent the nation is indebted to the educated colored man for the maintenance of peace between the races." Most convincing evidence that this is true was given a month ago at Atlanta, when, after the riots, a Committee on Public Safety called in the leading colored men of the city for counsel and co-operation. The pastor of our First Congregational Church, a graduate of Fisk and Yale, was one of these men. On his church calendar the following week his advice to his people was, "Be calm, temperate, thoughtful. Wait before action. Stop and consider. Be still. The better element of the white people is aroused in behalf of law and order as I have never seen before. Let us do our duty to all men and trust God for the rest. God is in his heaven. In the end all will be well." Such testimony as this, at such a time as this, is worthy a place in our Annual Survey.

Of all our schools none has had a more memorable year than Fisk University. We have already referred to its Fortieth Anniversary, celebrated with speech and song and generous contributions to the alumni fund. Fisk graduated this year the largest college class in its history—twenty-three, which its president thinks is probably the largest graduating college class of colored pupils in the world. The new Department of Applied Science has been fully organized; the $20,000 for its new building has been raised by one of the professors of the University and "Chase Hall" is now being erected. This new department adds to the faculty a professor of agriculture, an assistant professor of science and instructors in manual training and domestic science, all provided for by the Slater Board. At Talladega College the boarding halls and dormitories are overflowing with students. Plans are under way and the money is partly secured, for a theological hall, which will also furnish accommodations for students in the college course. The building is to be called "Andrews Hall," in honor of Prof. George W. Andrews who has just entered upon his thirty-seventh year of service under the American Missionary Association. Much necessary work has been done on the heating and lighting plants; machinery and power and a full printing equipment have been added to the industrial outfit, and the new library has been completed. After sixteen years of faithful service Pres. Atwood has retired from the presidency of Straight University, and the Rev. Richard C. Hastings has entered upon the duties of this important office. Tillotson College has a new and experienced president in the person of Dr. Isaac M. Agard. At Tougaloo University the new Strieby Hall is about ready for occupancy. Following a visit from representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture, this school has been made one of the observation stations of the Department. The addition of three trustees to the Board of Tougaloo has special significance as indicating the attitude of leading southern men toward our educational work. Some of the ablest and most influential men of the South are cheerfully serving our Negro schools as trustees, and there are no men of higher character and standing in the state of Mississippi than the three who have just now accepted this position on the Tougaloo Board. These men, and others like them, believe in our work and give it their cordial sympathy and hearty support.

Of our fine system of normal and graded schools it is impossible to speak in detail. They are everywhere doing a worthy and successful work. Avery Institute, at Charleston, has, like Fisk, celebrated its fortieth anniversary. A goodly number of our schools are entering, or will soon enter, their fifth decade. It is impossible to measure the influence they have exerted. The men and women who are giving themselves to this ministry of the gospel of education, some of them after many years of self-denying service, are worthy of all honor and are sure of a rich reward. A southern Bishop—southerner of southerners—speaking recently of these northern teachers of colored schools, says, "If they had spent their lives as missionaries to China or Africa they would have been looked upon as heroes, but the posts which they have actually held involved in many respects a larger amount of self-sacrifice than would have been called for in any foreign field." The Bishop certainly knows something of the prejudice and disesteem which these teachers have endured for their work's sake, but the joy of the work has been theirs and they do not speak of sacrifice. They find their sufficient compensation in minds enlightened and in lives redeemed. They bear witness to the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

CHURCH WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Number of churches	209
Ministers and missionaries	125
Church members	12,210
Total additions	1,274
Sunday-school scholars	12,712
Benevolent contributions	$6,201.76
Raised for church purposes	$45,288.45

Our church work in the South has been fully maintained and the churches have been served by a faithful ministry. The number of churches is 209, of ministers and missionaries 125.

There have been more changes than usual in the pastorates of our mountain churches, and the coming of new ministers has often brought new strength and courage. Some of the feeble country churches have been difficult to supply. The people are few and scattered, one pastor must serve in several places, and the work calls for faith and patience and no small measure of cheerful heroism. An able and devoted missionary for general evangelistic work is greatly needed. Two white churches in Louisiana have long looked to us for sympathy and support. One of these, in the thriving little city of Hammond, has now come to self-support.

Our colored churches have as a whole made an unusually good record for themselves during the past year. The growing list of self-supporting colored churches has been still further lengthened by the addition of two more names, those of the Howard Church, Nashville, Tenn., and the People's Church, Washington, D. C. Not a few churches have been building either meeting houses or parsonages. A large number of the country churches are seeking aid in maintaining parochial schools. Rev. James Wharton of England has rendered six months of service in evangelistic work and the churches visited by him have been greatly quickened. A new spirit of fellowship has been manifest among our churches as Congregational churches, and a clearer conception of the aim and mission of the denomination has been gained. Associations, both state and local, have taken on new interest. The churches are working together for a common end as perhaps never before, striving to maintain those high standards of church and Christian life, which characterize the churches of Puritan faith.

The most significant event of the year has been the assembling at Memphis of the "Second Conference of Congregational Workers for the Colored People of the South." This important assembly was not a church conference, but it brought together the religious leaders of the denomination and declared itself with special emphasis in behalf of self-support and of the extension of our church work throughout the South.

Rev. F. P. Woodbury, D.D., for so many years corresponding secretary of this Association and in charge of its church work, is continuing his valuable service to the churches as professor of homiletics in Howard Theological Seminary. Nothing in connection with our religious work is more important than the training of preachers. The preacher is the man of power. This is especially true among the colored people, and the sending forth of well-equipped and consecrated young men from our theological schools at Howard, Talladega and Fisk, to become the preachers and pastors to their people, is the highest service that can be rendered to the race.

Our evangelistic work on the island of Porto Rico has been greatly prospered and is full of promise. There, if anywhere, the field is white for the harvest. We have now six organized churches with more than thirty preaching stations. Two new church buildings, one at Fajardo and one at Las Cabezas, were dedicated during the past year, the one at Fajardo having been built by the Church Building Society. Our services are held for the most part in hired halls, in the homes of the poor or in the open air. Two ordained missionaries and their wives, two American ladies, and eight native lay helpers, comprise our full force of workers. It will be good news to the mission, that the Rev. H. R. Hogan and wife of Wisconsin have responded to our call and will sail early in December to give greatly needed re-enforcement to this work.

We had hoped at this meeting to be able to report that work had been begun on the new Christian Endeavor Hall for Blanche Kellogg Institute at Santurce, but the sum so far received is not quite sufficient to justify us in making contracts. The plans for the building have been drawn and have been accepted. It has been found necessary to build a concrete instead of a frame building and this will add considerably to the expense originally contemplated. We have now no work in hand which is more pressing than this. It is devoutly to be hoped that the means will be speedily forthcoming to furnish this very interesting and important school with the equipment which is absolutely essential to its existence. Let all Christian Endeavorers and friends of Porto Rico respond quickly!

The American Missionary Association is doing missionary work among the Indians of various tribes in seven different reservations located in five northwestern states. In addition to these, it maintains a mission for the Eskimos at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska.

A chief factor in our Indian mission work is the Santee Normal Training School, Santee, Nebraska. This school has maintained its usual high standards of excellence in its various departments during the year, although there has been an unusual number of changes in the teaching force. The school and all friends of our Indian missions sincerely mourn the sudden death of Miss Sarah E. Voorhees, who for twenty-six years had been the faithful and loving matron of the Boys' Cottage.

The Cheyenne and Arapaho Mission in Darlington, Oklahoma, has been transferred to the care of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, which has an extensive work throughout that reservation. The Rosebud mission, being temporarily without a resident missionary, was served for two months by the missionary from Darlington and for three months by Rev. Robert D. Hall. Mr. Hall is the son of our veteran missionary at Fort Berthold and was recently graduated from Oberlin Theological Seminary. He is the only white man, except his own father, who can preach in the Mandan language. During the coming year, Dr. Thomas L. Riggs will care for the Rosebud field in addition to his own work in the Cheyenne River Reservation and Mr. Hall will assist his father at Fort Berthold. The coming of the government allotting agent to the Grand River District of Standing Rock Agency and the building of a railroad through the district, have made much extra work for our faithful missionary there. She has secured a government grant of land for the mission and the Association needs funds for the moving and repairing of mission buildings. Our missionaries at Fort Yates have had their first vacation for several years and are now at work again.

In the great Crow Agency, in Montana, our missionaries are doing everything in their power to reach the scattered and restless Indians, many of whom have houses of their own but are loath to remain long in them. "They go and come all the time." A new missionary is needed to care for a large district which is still unreached. In the Lodge Grass District, where the people are more settled, there have been several baptisms and a church organization is contemplated. Day schools are also called for. The Crow Agency mission should have re-enforcement. Our venerable missionary at Skokomish, Washington, has ten preaching stations among the white settlers in addition to his Indian work.

The temporary transfer of the Rev. James F. Cross to Alaska has been a great boon to the Eskimo mission at Wales. The large reindeer herd, maintained for the industrial development of the natives, has been placed on a paying basis; the mission property has been improved, and the spiritual work of the mission has been greatly blessed. The religious meetings have been crowded, and much personal Christian work has been done by our Eskimo brethren. On Easter Sunday one hundred and thirty adults were baptized and received into the church and forty children were baptized. "This is only the beginning of the ingathering of the fruits." Mr. Cross has consented to remain another year and his daughter, Miss Helen Cross, has gone to join him.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE MISSIONS.

Total number of workers (white 33; Chinese and Japanese 26)	59
Number of pupils in schools	1,824
Number giving evidence of conversion	109
Chinese church members	100

The destruction of our well-equipped Mission House in San Francisco and the consequent scattering of the mission and temporary closing of the church and school have been the great trial of the year to our Chinese mission. The financial loss has been almost overwhelming both to the mission and to the Chinese workers. But the opportunity has been seized for vigorous Gospel effort, and many have avowed their purpose to follow Christ. The Japanese missions have also suffered greatly, but the brethren are not discouraged. The efficient superintendent, Rev. W. C. Pond, D.D., who for more than thirty years has given himself to this work, has been tireless in his devotion to the mission in this time of its calamity. A large sum of money is quickly and imperatively needed to replace the loss and reorganize the missions, both Chinese and Japanese, on the whole Pacific Coast.

HAWAIIAN MISSIONS.

American missionaries	3
Chinese evangelists	7
Japanese evangelists	12

The American Missionary Association is now responsible for three American missionaries, seven Chinese evangelists and twelve Japanese evangelists in the territory of Hawaii. The American missionaries are engaged in English work among the native Hawaiians, as follows: Rev. A. S. Baker on the island of Hawaii, Rev. A. B. Dodge on the island of Maui, and the Rev. J. A. Rath at Honolulu. The Chinese and Japanese evangelists are scattered through the various islands. The enthusiastic secretary of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, Rev. Doremus Scudder, D.D., writes us that the action of the A. M. A. in coming to the support of this work has "turned the tide among the native Hawaiians. In 1904 we had 3,695 native members of our churches, in 1906 we have 3,950. The fearful monotony of the declining record is broken after forty-two terrible years, and the American Missionary Association deserves the credit. During the two years of your assistance our evangelistic centres among the Chinese have increased from six to nine, exactly fifty per cent., and among the Japanese from thirteen to twenty, a little over fifty per cent. This is good. If some of our large givers would only help you adequately to man this field there would be no brighter spot under the stars and stripes than Hawaii."

FINANCIAL.

The receipts for current work have been $423,627.21 and the expenditures have been $402,285.75—a credit balance on the year of $21,341.46. This amount has been applied to the reduction of the old debt of $89,254.07 which had accumulated during the previous three years. The present debt is $67,912.61.

During the year the Committee has appealed for an increase in donations of 25%. The burdensome debt of two of our sister societies and their pressing appeals for special support have led your Committee to a moderate endeavor in behalf of the needs of the great and growing work of the Association. It is gratifying, however, to be able to report that there has been an increase in donations of $21,260 or about 13%.

The Co-operative Committee of the six societies has suggested the sum of $250,000 as a moderate sum to be collected in donations for the immediate needs of the work of the Association. This is about 37% increase over the $182,808.08 received in donations during the year.

Only about one-third of the churches made a general contribution for the Association the past year, and only a comparatively few individuals gave any large amounts.

THE DANIEL HAND INCOME ACCOUNT,

For the education of the Colored People in the South.

The income from the Daniel Hand Fund was $71,413.26, which with the balance on hand Oct. 1st of $5,222.08 made a total of $76,635.34. The expenditures were $71,640.26, and the balance in hand and appropriated for 1906-07 is $4,995.08.

SUMMARY OF RECEIPTS FOR THE YEAR.

Current Work	$423,627.21
Income not in Current Receipts	4,495.70

CONDITIONAL GIFTS.

Your Committee again calls attention to the plan adopted some years ago for receiving gifts conditioned upon certain annual payments by the Association to the donors during their life time. This Conditional Gift Plan, as it has been termed, has many advantages. It assures an annual sum during the life time of the donor. The income is safe and assured. It relieves the donor from any care or anxiety as to the investment of the money. When the gift matures it saves all possibility of litigation as the money is in the hands of the Association for its missionary use. We commend this method of conditional gifts to the friends of the Association.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

We heartily appreciate the assistance rendered through organized work of women. Co-operation of Women's Societies has been solicited and welcomed through our Woman's Bureau; missionary representatives have been assigned in response to contributions, communication established with the field through letters from specially supported teachers, box and barrel help distributed, speakers provided for local and state meetings and material for programs widely circulated. The contributions for the year through Women's Societies, $31,027.40 have greatly aided in the prosecution of this work.

SPECIAL ACTION OF THE ASSOCIATION.

At the Fifty-ninth Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association held in Worcester, Mass., October 17-19, 1905, Article IV of the Constitution was amended by the omission of the clause "in the month of October or November." As amended the Article reads as follows:

"Article IV: The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be held at such time and place as may be designated by the Association, or in case of failure to act, by the Executive Committee, by notice printed in the official publication of the Association for the preceding month."

This amended article of the Constitution duly appears in the form of the Constitution as published.

Notice of amendment of Article V of the Constitution was presented at the last Annual Meeting in the following form:

"Resolved: That Article V shall be amended so as to omit the following clause: 'no member of the Executive Committee who has served one full term of five years, shall be eligible for re-election until one year shall have passed.'"

This amendment is before the Sixtieth Annual Meeting.

AMONG OUR CONSTITUENTS.

The Committee profoundly appreciates the cordial and generous response which has come to the appeals for the support of this great mission service during the closing year. An increase of twenty-five per cent. in gifts from living donors seemed reasonable and proper to those who gathered at the Fifty-ninth Annual Meeting at Worcester last year. Every possible effort has been made to secure this amount. Had we reached the results striven for, two hundred thousand dollars would have been received from the donations during the year. We regret that this amount has not been reached but we rejoice in the wholesome and considerable increase. The amount reported in the Treasurer's statement is $182,808.08. The gain reaching the goodly sum of $21,260 is encouraging and we have confident hopes that during the Sixty-first year, upon which we enter at this Annual Meeting, still larger contributions may come from our generous constituency.

With the limited secretarial force available for personal addresses and missionary messages to the churches, it is impossible to accept all of the many invitations that come to our offices through the courtesy and fraternal interest of the pastors and churches. Missionaries from the field ably supplement the work of the officers and find a large welcome in many pulpits. The pastor of an important church recently bore his cordial testimony to the value of "the missionary address in its presentation of the missionary gospel and as furnishing his people and himself a larger vision of the Kingdom of God." As the preaching of the gospel from Sabbath to Sabbath is essential in order to hold and enlarge the influence of the local church, so this preaching of a missionary gospel by those who stand immediately in touch with these great movements in these far-reaching mission fields, is essential to the maintenance and development of the larger missionary view and power of the churches. This estimate of the value of special addresses from those representing the A. M. A. is the increasing judgment of the brethren of the pastorate.

To meet these demands your Committee has called into the service among our constituent churches Rev. Charles A. Northrop, who is well known to the churches both as pastor and as the secretary of the united benevolent movement. After a visit to the South, where he came into personal contact with the field work of the A. M. A., he has been busy especially throughout Connecticut and New York in reaching the pastors and churches and responding to invitations that could not otherwise be accepted.

The Committee desires especially to express its appreciation of the movement on the part of the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society and our Sunday-schools in their interest in and contributions toward the erection of "Christian Endeavor Hall" at Blanche Kellogg Institute, Santurce, Porto Rico. One of our most efficient missionaries from this field has given herself to the presentation of this work to the young people of our churches. A generous friend in the West contributed a considerable amount toward the erection of this building and the Endeavor Societies, Sunday-schools and young people's organizations of various kinds have added to this fund. It is not possible to measure the value of this movement by the money contributed. The constituency of young people interested in this work and giving toward it whose sympathy has been aroused by this movement will be the future constituents of the Association and those upon whom the large burden of its support will fall.

The Young People's Forward Movement has carried on its work during the year. This Association has had its part in this movement. The Silver Bay Convention was a gathering of unusual interest. At this convention the Association was represented by the president of one of our Southern universities.

The American Missionary has been published ten months of the year and has gained in its paid circulation. This magazine brings fresh and reliable information from the various mission fields to the churches and it is often found on the table of the pastor and testimony to its value is not infrequently given.

Congregational Work represents the united work of our various societies. Especially among the young people of our constituency, Congregational Work finds a wide reading. Its value seems to be appreciated. It is proving an important element in the creation of our constituency of the future.

The demand for general literature published by the American Missionary Association and referring to the problems with which it has to deal, and descriptive of the methods employed in its work, is constantly increasing.. This demand is not confined to our churches and Sunday-schools. Literary societies, patriotic clubs, students of universities and seminaries find this literature of large value in their study of these perplexing and profound problems. Although this literature is distributed gratuitously to our constituency, the expense in its publication is considerable. It is essential to the maintenance of our work. The Association could not hold its place without this literature. Quite occasionally friends who write asking for pamphlets on any given subject kindly enclose financial remuneration. We recommend this habit.

The reduction of the debt has been encouraging. There still remains, however, $67,912.61 in this unfortunate balance. With the hopeful outcome of this closing fiscal year and the abounding prosperity of our country and the importance of the great work which the American Missionary Association is doing, may we not hope that the friends of the cause will rise to the occasion and entirely obliterate this debt before January 1, 1907? Sixty eight generous contributors each giving one thousand dollars would wipe out the debt. One hundred and thirty-six like minded givers each contributing five hundred dollars would bring about the same blessed result. If this is impossible, is it not within the ability of the churches to gather a special collection for the debt of the Association between now and January first? Why not devote Forefathers' Day and the Sabbath preceding it to a great effort throughout the land for the extinction of this debt? Will not the churches represented here begin during this gathering a movement that shall free the Association from this burden, bring courage and cheer to the great body of missionary workers and launch this grand old Association upon the new year with no other obligation than that of accomplishing living work with living money?

We cannot close this report without expressing our sincere appreciation of the sympathetic, prayerful and cordial support which the friends and constituents of this Association have manifested in many ways. Notwithstanding the pressing and urgent appeals and large and comprehensive efforts carried on during the year by sister societies the work of this Association has not been forgotten in your generous gifts. Both in the mission fields and among our constituent churches it has been evident that the ethical value and the spiritual significance of this work were more and more appreciated. We express profound gratitude to God for His overruling providence and quickening spirit. We close the year with every confidence that His smile is still upon the work and that His hand will guide in the future as it has in the past.

Obituaries.

In the sudden death, April 29, 1906, of Miss Sara Elizabeth Voorhees, who for twenty-six years had given her missionary service for the Indians at the Santee mission school, the Association as well as the school met with a great loss. Besides the special care of the Indian boys, to whom she was like a mother in her thoughtfulness, Miss Voorhees had been very influential in building up the Mothers' Society of Christian Endeavor among the Indian women. For thirteen years the plans and directions came from her. Her whole life as a missionary was one of faithful consecration and devotion which won the love of the pupils and of their parents and of her associates in the work of the mission.

The Association realizes a severe loss in the death of Mr. Thomas E. Stillman, in October, 1906, a highly valued member of the Executive Committee. Mr. Stillman, who for many years was one of the most noted and successful members of the New York bar, brought to the Association not only his exceptional legal experience but an extended and accurate knowledge also of large business enterprises with which he was associated. He was for a long time a director in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and an officer and director in various financial activities.

An earnest Christian gentleman, for many years a member of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, sympathetic with our missionary and benevolent work, his council and wisdom in the executive board will be greatly missed and the loss of it deeply regretted. His personal and generous qualities will long be remembered. His death at Lisieux, France, in his seventieth year, was the result of a lamentable accident.

Miss Tirzah Snell Smith, a teacher in our mission school in Porto Rico, died suddenly at the school. Miss Smith was born at Ceylon, India, of missionary parents, Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Smith. Her grandparents were also missionaries. She herself looked forward to a continuous service in Porto Rico, but before a year had been completed her earthly work was done. All who knew her mourned her early and, as it seems to human knowledge, her untimely decease.

In the death of Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, D.D., at the advanced age of 78 years, there passed away an uncommon man of heroic character and of exceptional historical interest, one who held the oldest commission issued by the American Missionary Association. This was dated October 10, 1848. In 1858 Dr. Rogers went to Berea, Ky., and the school, which afterwards became a college with him as prominent professor, was under his direction as Principal. He remained as professor until 1878, having wrought a great work. He lived to richly inherit the promises.

ANNUAL REPORT
OF THE
BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

The period of sixty years in which the American Missionary Association called to a great mission, has taken the lead in its steadily expanding work, has been also a period of remarkable privilege and opportunity to women, which they have been quick to see and improve.

When the American Missionary Association was organized in 1846 there were here and there in the churches a few women's societies for church aid and missionary offerings. But the organization of "Female Anti-slavery Societies" begun about twenty years before the Civil War, carried the closest fellowship in a common cause. They organized as "American women." Their impelling motive was "sympathy for three millions of our countrymen in chains;" their purpose, "to aid to the extent of our power that cause which has their freedom as its object." What could they do? They used their membership fees and contributions for the diffusion of literature. It seemed but little, to be sure, yet they had seized a powerful instrument for the furtherance of their cause. During the war period their activity found larger scope in work with the Sanitary and Christian Commission. In this experience they gained knowledge of co-operative work, also more confidence in their power of accomplishment; and with this preparation, in response to an evidently God-given "call," organization for missionary work promptly followed, resulting within ten years in Women's Boards for Missions in all the leading denominations. These were mainly for Foreign Missions but by the close of the next decade Congregational women had united in State Organizations for work in our own country, and these State Unions now numbering thirty-seven have already federated for more effective operation. So hath God wrought.

We have just closed a year of somewhat strenuous work in the Woman's Department of the American Missionary Association. A review of it now that its destiny is fixed, reveals many a hill top of thanksgiving and rejoicing, with here and there a valley of disappointment from which we seem to hear the sad comment, "It might have been." But let failures serve only as a spur to greater activity and prayerfulness as the work goes on.

Although we are not able to report any advance in total contributions to the work of the American Missionary Association through Women's Unions, we do report with thankfulness that they are not far short of the total of the preceding year. For the twelve months ending September 30, the American Missionary Association received through State Organizations $26,657.22 and from other local societies $4,370.18. Total, $31,027.40. Thirty-five State Organizations have contributed. Sixteen of these have made some advance over the last year. We would like to name these all, but how can we know that those that have barely held their own or have fallen behind, may not have worked as earnestly and loyally though with less results. But we may safely record that this year Minnesota is the banner Union in the increase of its contributions to the work of the American Missionary Association.

Through these offerings from Women's Societies every department of American Missionary Association work is aided from Hawaii to Porto Rico including full support of forty-three missionaries. Specially supported missionaries are the letter writers; and any State Union pledging the full support, $400, of a missionary teacher has the circulation of these letters among all its auxiliaries. Thus during the past year many thousand copies of letters from missionaries have been sent out for use at missionary meetings. Printed information of the work with Study Leaflets has been furnished freely whenever desired, speakers sent to State and local conferences and frequently to single church societies.

The growth of "Mission Study Classes" calls for literature of a wide range in the American Missionary Association field. There is great interest in a careful study of the Negro race now numbering about ten millions in America; also of the millions of our Anglo-Saxons lost sight of in the southern mountains until because of isolation they have become a peculiar, distinct and backward people. So of the Indians from "A Century of Dishonor" to the present day of their advance toward citizenship and Christanity; the large Chinese population within our gates and the rapid incoming of the Japanese. And there are the new outlying fields, Porto Rico and Hawaii, to understand and locate in missionary responsibility. Hence this increasing demand for information which is heartily welcomed. For if people will know, if they will lift up their eyes and see these fields, how can they refrain from aiding the American Missionary Association to minister in Christ's name to all these races now under our flag?

Of the 757 missionaries in the American Missionary Association fields, 464 are women. They have a responsible part, fill important positions, bear the burden and heat of active work in close contact with the physical, mental and spiritual poverty of these most needy races in our country. They are from cultured homes and from our own church circles. Some are native workers who, trained in mission schools, and won to Christ, are in turn giving their best service for God and home and native land. These all look to us for support; prayerful, sympathetic, financial support.

As the vast field of the American Missionary Association has passed in review before us, and over against it we see $31,000 from our Women's Societies we can but feel that there are yet many societies in our six thousand churches that have not shared the joy of service in this direction. We need your help. For the women workers in this broad field of the American Missionary Association we appeal to the Women's State Home Missionary Organizations, and all local societies, for increased support. They represent in active work at the front, Christian women at Home.

It was a goodly sum which our Women's Boards sent to the treasury of the Foreign Board in its year just closed. Nor was it too large an offering. We might do well to make it even larger for the wide world is now accessible for the discipline of all nations.

But shall we not fix as high a standard for ourselves in contributions to the Home Boards? America has now an immense field of missions, called Home Missions because under our flag, but representing the races of the earth. The former things have passed away; we can no longer play at Home Missions when all the conditions call for our utmost outpouring of time, influence, money, for the saving of this nation to Christianity with its many strange un-American anti-Christian elements.

Has not the time come, now this year, for every woman's organization for Home Missions, to so increase its pledges to the American Missionary Association as to convey to its membership a sense of the importance of this field, and that God calls us imperatively to an era of self-denial that the work may be carried on. Let the State Organizations that are gaining strength take one more missionary at $400 in the American Missionary Association field. Let those that have contributed only half, assume a full $400 and have their own missionary representative. Let those that have given less, now give a half for the support of one of these teachers. Let the young people come forward, with thir gifts of $50 shares and $25 shares for Porto Rico, or Hawaii, for the Indians or Eskimo or southern work. Let all move forward with their gifts as the missionary forces move forward in the field. Then, indeed, with the reflex influence upon the churches there would be no more debt, no more loss of opportunity through closing of missions, no more sad refusal of aid when the Gospel of the Christian school and church are implored for the millions in America who need the gospel light.

The American Missionary Association is at the opening year of a new decade. God has crowned its labors with blessing wherever its missions have been planted, in recovered manhood and womanhood, in winning souls, training them for service and setting them at work for God. Let us then make this a year of great financial blessing through larger offerings for this work. For this we appeal to women of wealth, to women of moderate means, to self-supporting women, to all who loving God love also their country and would help to make it a power for righteousness among the nations.

AUDITORS' CERTIFICATE.

We have employed Frederick C. Manvel, Certified Public Accountant of the State of New York, to examine the books and accounts of H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer of The American Missionary Association, for the year ending September 30th, 1906, and herewith submit his statement of the results of his work as a part of our report.

We have also made a careful examination of all bonds and other securities held by the Association and find the same to agree with the records in the books and balance sheet of same date.

The Treasurer's Bond was submitted to us and found to be in order.

EDWIN H. BAKER,
JOHN E. LEECH,
Auditors.

New York, October 15th, 1906.

MR. EDWIN H. BAKER,
MR. JOHN E. LEECH, } Auditors.

GENTLEMEN:

Having made a careful audit of the accounts of the Treasurer of THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION for the year ending September 30th, 1906, I am able to report that I have found them all correct as stated, with the same painstaking care and methods in every part of the work, which have been noted and commended in previous years, still employed. The detailed accounts are carefully kept and the most approved methods used by financial institutions for the safety of funds and completeness of records are introduced and kept up wherever practicable.

The clerical accuracy of the bookkeeping has been proved by monthly examinations of the footings, comparison of the cancelled checks made with the cash book entries, postings to the ledger checked, and figures in the monthly statements and reports verified.

The balances in the Banks and Trust Companies have been verified by certificates from all the institutions and found to agree with those in the Treasurer's books.

I have verified the figures in the Trial Balance, comparing them with the General Ledger, and the statement of Resources in the General Balance sheet has been verified by a personal examination of the securities by the committee in which I assisted.

I find the debit balance of last year in the Current Fund Account $89,254.07 has been reduced this year by $21,341.46, which is the excess of receipts over the payments in the current year and makes the debit balance in this Fund at the end of this year $67,912.61.

Respectfully,
FREDERICK C. MANVEL,
Certified Public Accountant of State of New York.

REPORT OF THE EASTERN DISTRICT—1905-06.

REV. GEORGE H. GUTTERSON, District Secretary.

The year ending September 30, 1906, was an exceedingly busy one in the Eastern District Office of the American Missionary Association. In these days of multiplying needs and of great social changes in New England, it requires constant and fresh effort to keep the work of the regular societies before the pastors and the churches.

If Congregational people were more loyal to their own denomination and not quite so free to take up and support every unattached object, the task of the Secretaries would be somewhat easier. The Home Missionary problem in New England is becoming very pressing. Eighty-five per cent. of the people in Massachusetts are foreign born, or their children. The problems of church extension in the larger cities are multiplying. New strategic points must be chosen and this requires constant thought and expenditure of money.

New schemes are constantly being started by graduates of colored institutions in the South. Such persons invariably take the first train for Boston. It may be seriously questioned whether all such enterprises should be supported; certainly not unless they have been thoroughly examined, their location and management approved of. In spite of all these conditions the revenue of the American Missionary Association from New England increased last year some six per cent. over that of the preceding year, for which we are profoundly grateful. We trust that this indicates that the accusation that New England has given up the Negro as a hopelss case is hereby disproved.

A variety has been added to the work of the year by three very interesting tours—two in the state of Vermont, one in the state of Maine. The Vermont work was ably and cordially planned by Miss Mary P Drew, Secretary of Young People's work, Waterbury, Vermont. Mrs. Rebecca P. Fairbanks of St. Johnsbury, President of the Vermont Woman's Union, also gave very valuable and sympathetic assistance. One of the Vermont tours was taken in partnership with Rev. E. S. Tead of the Education Society, and proved very interesting and helpful to all who participated. The third tour was in the state of Maine, visiting a goodly number of churches and holding not only Sunday, but week-day, meetings, so far as it was possible to secure them. The work of the year in the Eastern District has been further extended by co-operation with the Young People's Institutes as they have been held in several places.

A new set of slides and a prepared lecture, illustrating the work among the Chinese and Japanese in the Sandwich Islands, has been added to the equipment. Below is given a partial showing of some of the work done in the Boston Office:

During the year 3,338 callers have been entertained at the office. This is an increase of 439 over the previous year. 9,272 letters and postals, including specials, have been written and sent out from the office. This is an increase of 3,854 over the last year. 521 invitations to speak in the churches have been received. This is an increase of 153 over the previous year. 29,960 leaflets and 19,765 collection envelopes have been issued to those asking for the same. 4 446 mite-boxes have been distributed. This is an increase of 3,110 over the preceding year. 100 different churches were visited by the Secretary, 55 of which were new ones upon the list, never having been visited before. 141 addresses were delivered to 10,424 hearers and in doing this work 9,948 miles were travelled.

It will be of interest to the churches in the Western District to learn that while the majority of our churches have failed to apprehend the urgency of the Christian and patriotic service of the American Missionary Association, as the claims warrant or as they are met in other parts of the country, nevertheless the churches of the Western District have made a gratifying increase over last year.

The following table gives us the figures of the last two years:

The increase has been due to the greater interest shown by pastors in studying the problems of the Association and presenting them to their people. No real advance can ever be made without such interest. To our honored Dr. Pond is due the increase in California, nor should I fail to speak of the faithful and acceptable work of Rev. George W. Moore and Mrs. Ida Vose Woodbury, both of whom have gone on long itineraries planned by this office in connection with our pastors and officers of the Woman's Home Missionary Unions. For the hearty welcome which has been accorded these representatives of our work I return most hearty thanks.

A larger number of churches have taken the needs of the belated races upon their hearts than ever before. Wherever it has been found possible to come into touch with non-contributing churches in some way other than through the mail, our work has always made its appeal. But the distances in the Western District are so magnificent that it is hard to see how, with the present force, the field can have the intensive cultivation which is always necessary, if results are to be gained.

If the present prosperity of the West is to continue, the question of the appointment of an additional secretary and a new division of existing districts between Pennsylvania and the Pacific Coast should be considered.

The A. M. A. is doing a distinct service for the churches and for the Kingdom, as in sane, earnest fashion, she strives to meet the growing feeling of race prejudice which is developing more rapidly in the West than in any section of our land.

The Association has a new word for the churches to-day which all of them should hear.

THE PRICE OF FREEDOM.

SERMON

BY

REV. G. G. ATKINS, D.D.

Delivered at the Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, Oberlin, Ohio, October 23, 1906.

Text, Acts 22:28.

You will find the text for the evening in the 22nd chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, in the 28th verse: "And the chief captain answered, 'With a great sum obtained I this freedom,' and Paul said, 'But I was free born.'"

The text itself is the first in the dialogue, "With a great sum obtained I this freedom." Your preacher begs to say at the beginning of this endeavor, that he has chosen the rendering of the older rather than the later versions, not wholly through ignorance, but through willfulness. Freedom is a more simple and commanding term than citizenship, and where there are so many temptations to bye and forbidden paths, the simpler and more commanding, the terms with which we deal, the more likely we are to come in safety to our appointed havens.

But one begs leave beside to qualify the old rendering of freedom by the newer rendering of citizenship, for freedom here is not the isolated and capricious freedom of the individual; the freedom which we are to consider is a social freedom, a related freedom, a subordinate and a responsible freedom. And will you bear in mind constantly those qualifications of freedom, as we proceed to the consideration of this text. If, moreover, the concrete illustration of certain principles from this to be derived, bear more emphatically and directly upon the problem of the Negro race than the problem of the allied peoples committed to the care of this American Missionary Association, will you remember again that this is not a matter of oversight, but simply a choice of that which is most evident, in order that we may apply the most simple and commanding truths to the most evident and imperative problems. One must say, still further, that one has chosen for the text the least dramatic half of the passage. The answer of Paul "I am free born" burns yet with a certain fire which the centuries have not been able to extinguish, and we see very clearly through it all the bowed form of the apostle of fire and blood meeting the threat of the scourge with the majestic affirmation of Roman citizenship. But if one has chosen the least dramatic half, the text, one contends still that one has chosen the profounder half, the text. If some one had not said in some fashion and at some time, Paul's father possibly or his grandfather less likely, we do not know, "With a great sum obtained I this freedom," it would never have been possible for the apostle to have said, "But I am free born." Because freedom always has its price, and that price is not to be escaped; somehow and somewhere the payment of it is always exacted and the men who are gifted by God, and fling back into that which threatens the affirmation, "I am free born," have come into that gift after all only because someone else has paid for them the inevitable price of freedom.

And so we are come broadly upon our theme. The theme is "The Price of Freedom." To consider some implications of it, to consider some historical derivations of it, to consider some immediate applications of it, and to come, in the end of it all, beneath the shadow of the cross itself, that will be our endeavor.

And now, freedom, as one defined it just now, social, related, subordinate, responsible, freedom of that sort is compact of two elements. It consists on the one side of the inner fitness, on the other side, of the outer opportunity. The achievement of the inner fitness, has been the master moral achievement of the race; and the achievement of the outer opportunity has been the supreme historical achievement of the race.

One says that the achievement of the inner fitness has been the supreme moral achievement of the race, and that one believes is rightly said, because the inner fitness for freedom is profoundly a moral fitness. In its own turn it consists of two things; it consists of the capacity to see law, and it consists of the discipline which makes one willing to obey. For out of these two, the vision of law and the willingness to obey, the inner fitness for freedem lifts itself; men are never fit to be free unless they have themselves, and directly and without mediation, some broken vision at least of the great imperatives of life. Men are never fit to be free unless they hold within themselves, without mediation and without outward coercion, in some broken fashion at least, the capacity to obey the law whose imperatives they see.

Now, the winning of this capacity on the part of any considerable body of men, has been the master moral achievement of the race, and along with it there has gone the payment of immense and continuing prices. These costs are rooted deep in the very speculative immensities of the cosmic order. There is a cosmic price of the inner fitness. There are certain things which, for the inner fitness is a part of personality, and we are coming to see that personality itself has cost a cosmic price. We are beginning to see that the roots of personality are far more deeply infused than we have dreamed; we are beginning to see that the travail of creation is towards the achievement of personality. We are beginning to see that the Lord of Life has used all the channeled forms of life for the majesty of His own divine approach; and the discarded forms which meet us from time to time along the highroads of our scientific search only bear witness to this how much God has used, how much God has cast away before personality might become a spiritual actuality in His universe, as we know it. These costs are rooted deep in the speculative immensities of the moral order. Behind the freedom of the will itself the power of personality which makes free citizenship possible, there lies the moral cost of its achievement. Here one sees the vast bulk of folly, shame and fault, the ground of the atonement, the soil, out of which the cross lifts itself, the irrevocable condition precedent of that capacity for freedom which was presently to find itself concrete and historical forms.

But all these things are too remote for our consideration. There are things are far more definite; and every man of us who has won manhood, who has come up through the restlessness and caprice of his own earlier life, every man or woman of us who stands beside son or daughter, watching the old, old process of moral self-realization, knows just what the price of a grounded manhood or a grounded womanhood is. We know how long it takes to find out the most elementary things, how long it takes to find out that stone walls will not give way and that heads are hurt against them, how long it takes to find out that fire really burns, and that sin really stains; how long it took us to find out, in the great word of George Adam Smith, that "laws are never broken, but that men break themselves against laws." And when we look back, every man of us, along the road of our own experience, and when we count the scars and number the wounds and know the inner cost of that which has come to us, we know well enough that the achievement of inner fitness for any sort of freedom is a most tremendous thing and achieved at a most tremendous price. And when we multiply this by the mass of the race, and when we lengthen it through the unfolding years, and when we count up the long discipline of humanity; and when we try to see very clearly how stupid and how slow we have been through the unfolding centuries of God, and when we try to cast up the price which men have paid in the long issue for their folly and their fault and their stubbornness; and when we see that all this has been only the road along which divine and sacrificial love has led us in order that we might come into any broken capacity for freedom, we begin to see that the inner capacity for this elementary exercise of manhood or womanhood, has had its price. No man, standing where he feels reasonably sure that he has come out into the simple ordering of his own manhood, is ever likely to say anything else but the old word of this captain. "With a great price obtained I this freedom." And when one casts up the endeavor of the race, one says the same thing, "With a great sum obtained we this freedom."

But when one casts up the long endeavor of the race, one begins to see, after all, that it was not in vain. I suppose that the great thing, after all, has been the incarnation of law, the incarnation of vision, and the incarnation of the power to obey. That is the great thing in a boy's life. You see the laws of life, as one begins to mediate them, break against the walls of that personality like the light against a dead wall, and a window opens here and a door there, and a truth is lodged there, and a law gets its voice there, and you begin to see that before your eyes a moral miracle is happening, that your boy, coming out of the mystery of things, is beginning to incarnate in his vision the wonder of the law itself. The race has done that. The law of God lay about us like light and sought to find its lodging. There were times when it seemed that men had no law and each man did what was right in his own eyes; and then the law found lodgment here and lodgment there, in the kings of Carlisle, and the strong men of Kipling, and the judges and the law-givers and the leaders of their kind; and then bit by bit this law began to get itself lodged incarnate in the minds of men, until here the broken fraction of a race, and there the segment of a people, began sensibly to lift itself up upon the level of a fitness for the conduct of life, to the level of a fitness for the conduct of social life, to the level of a fitness for the conduct of life in all its moral and ethical and spiritual relations.

And then another thing happened, and that is, when men began even approximately, in the mass, to lift themselves to this level, when they had got to the place where they could begin to do a bit without the schoolmaster, they found very often that the schoolmaster was not willing to be dispensed with, and men who were capable of approaching much more freely and intimately the problem of life, found that what had been duty and discipline before now stood between them and that approach. And so there began, when fitness had been achieved, the long struggle for opportunity. The king who had been in one age the leader of his people, became in another age the obstructor of his people. The constitution which in one age afforded freedom to men's power, in another age obstructed it. The organization which had been at one time the bulwark of liberty and life became presently hostile to them. And so upon some outer field men wrought out the long realization of the outer opportunity. There is no need to enter into detail here in this fellowship. It is the story of battlefields, the story of senate chambers, of forums, of the heroic, and of the forgotten; the story of the long, long strife between the fluid human soul and the rigidity of institutions, the soul striving to subordinate institutions to the power of its own fluid life, and laying bare with the impulses of its own blood the channels through which it should issue to a larger and more effectual life.

In certain historical unfoldings all this found its full perfection. Wherever you get the inner freedom or the inner capacity, and in due measure the outer opportunities, you get freedom, you get self-government, in their most perfect realization. We know well enough, and do not need to be told, that we who belong to the Anglo-American line have exemplified this in its historical perfectness, that for the most part there has been that full adjustment between our capacity for freedom and our opportunity for freedom, which has somehow made the whole projection of our institutions suitable and effectual; and we like to think that here in America, in certain aspects of our life, that adjustment has been most perfect and most majestic.

When Prince Henry, the brother of the Kaiser, was welcomed by President Eliot to Massachusetts, President Eliot siad, "Here in Massachusetts we will show you the most perfect exemplification of democracy which the world has ever seen." And that was only a concrete way of saying that just there—and we joy in it, we have the right to, we know what it cost, and our fathers paid the price—we have a right to say that there there was that perfect mediation, that perfect adaptation of the inner and outer which made spirit and form suit each other like a perfectly modelled garment, showing to men how fine a thing freedom is when set upon principle and founded on law.

But one is coming closer all the time to the application of all this. Wherever men fail on the one side or the other, two things happen. If the inner fitness outruns the outer opportunity, one gets despotism; and if the outer opportunity outruns the inner fitness, one gets anarchy. And the emphasis which is to be put from age to age is determined by those relations. There have been times when it was the supreme duty of men to preach freedom, to fight for freedom, to die for freedom; and there have been times when it was the supreme duty of men to stand by law, to preach moral fitness, to cry out for discipline, and to strive to bring the inner fitness of men up to the outer opportunity. And one submits that this is the imperative, and the master imperative of American life. When all is said the thing which we Americans are needing is not more freedom. We have more freedom than we know what to do with. Our captains of industry have more freedom to trade than they have vision of the divine significance of industry. Our political leaders have more freedom to combine for political operation than they have vision of the divine significance of political life. Men have more freedom to vote than they have vision of the sanctity of the ballot. And while it is perfectly possible to put all this too strongly and to forget the great wholesome and saving element in our commonwealth, nevertheless one does stand to declare that the crying need in our America is not more liberty, but more capacity for liberty; not the widening of opportunity, but the heightening of the inner temper.

And all this comes home to the men who have upon them the concern of this Association. In America more than anywhere else opportunity has run to meet men. For the most part, capacity has had to win opportunity; but our opportunity has been bought and paid for and given as a gift to all those who come here to share it and to be lifted up by it. Again and again, with the matchless confidence in what men are and what men can do, we have dowered the seemingly unfit with the splendor of opportunity, and they have risen to our faith, and by that very dower have been truly enfranchised.

But never was there a more dramatic and inclusive endowment of men with the long age-bought opportunities of freedom than when the emancipated and enfranchised colored people were dowered with the blood-bought opportunity of our Anglo-American inheritance. That came to pass through forces and facts which are so familiar that to hint at them is a platitude. But it is our glory that when it did come, the men who laid the foundations of the earlier work of this American Missionary Association, saw very clearly that the outer opportunity was to be redeemed by the creation of the inner fitness. They accepted emancipation and enfranchisement immediately as a glad and radiant fact, and they set themselves, while the battle-fields were still smoking with the embers of strife, while the southern roads were still rutted with the cannon's wheel, they set themselves to the task of the creation of the inner capacity where the outer opportunity had gone, borne upon the wings of battle.

I remember distinctly a very simple-spoken and quiet little woman, who was our neighbor for a little while in Massachusetts, and the story of whose life one did not clearly know until one day she went to her reward, and we found out that she had been a soldier; that while the fires of the war were smoking still in the South, she had gone down there, with a courage as superb as that of any soldier on the battlefield, carrying, through a consecrated womanhood, the message of the cross of Jesus Christ. The men of her faith saw the Negro not as he was, but as he was to become. They looked up from fields sodden with the inheritance of slavery, to more radiant uplands. They saw upon his face the light which St. Gaudens saw, and which is caught imperishably upon the bronze faces of those unresting ranks marching by Shaw as he stands in youth immortal where Beacon Hill stoops towards Boston Common. And they saw that wherever those faces, lit with a new light, were to march, they would never reach the appointed goal unless strength marched by their side, unless wisdom led them, unless love suffered for them, and unless courage was willing to die for them. And one stands here to affirm to-night, that in the light of forty years that faith has been splendidly justified.

If one considers the Negro, what he came from and what he was, it would seem, after all, that this has been a thing which ranks as a modern miracle. If we take the whole accounting of the concrete realization of the endeavor of faith, we say that faith has been justified.

In the clear light of forty years' endeavor for the betterment of the Negro race after the vision of the fathers of emancipation and enfranchisements, and by the method of the mediation of Christian education, through consecrated personality, vividly aware of the hail of opposition which is beating upon both our ideal and our method, the Association stands to declare two things. First of all, that we must go on, and that we must go on in the Spirit and by the method of the Cross. We must go on.

We have come to a time when men are impatient, when they are constantly crying out that things must be immediately realized. We are seeing, as our fathers did not clearly see, the immensity of our task; and all the while, people about us are saying that it is all a failure, and they are striving to close the roads at both ends—striving on the one side to take away from the Negro anything for which he may fit himself, and, on the other side, to belittle those forces which are striving to make him fit. And they are saying he must remain a hewer of wood and a drawer of water until the end of time.

Now, whether we be right or wrong one does not dogmatically affirm, but I don't believe that the thing which we ask is half as impossible as the thing which they ask. I do not believe that a vast segment of a race can be made to camp forever on the plains of night, while another segment of that race marches on toward the dawn. Abraham Lincoln said that a house divided against itself shall not stand; and Abraham Lincoln would say to-day—and one may say it reverently enough—that still a house divided against itself may not stand. It was not possible that this people should endure part free and part slave. It is not possible that this people shall endure with part of its population marching on towards the great ends of civic and spiritual life, and another element of its population resolutely held back. We shall go on together, or we shall halt together. We must go on.

We must go on because already so large a part of the price has been paid. It seems only the other day, but I know it was very much longer than that, when, coming back from keeping Memorial Day in one of the towns of the Champlain Valley, we turned toward the summits of the Green Mountains and drove mile after mile during all the long, wonderful clarity of the afternoon upon the very summits of the foothills of the mountains. I shall never forget that immense, poignant clarity of light, how the upland meadows slept in the light, and how the waters sung by the roadside, and how the spruces marched up the slope and how the birches spoke to us their benediction. It was an immensely lonely road, a house here and a house there, and only a few people on the way, sad-faced women, and men whose faces were lined with years and weariness, who were wearing blue for the most part, coming back from the task they had been doing. Along that upland roadside, there were the little New England burying-grounds, which some of you to-night remember, and where very like some of your own dead lie sleeping. And I declare to you, far, far from the tides of full life, so far and so high that the roar of the lower valley and the bustle of cities were utterly lost, there was not a burying-ground up there on the hillside which was not starred with its flag, and every flag stood for a grave, and every grave stood for a soldier. I recognized then, as I had never recognized before, from what immense and remote sources those red confluent tides were drawn which mingled upon southern battlefields. "Let us here highly resolve," said Abraham Lincoln, "that these dead shall not have died in vain." And we are not going to give over the task that they inaugurated, because so large a part of the cost has already been paid.

But our fault very likely has been that we have imagined that in the paying of that price, all the price has been paid. There are immense and outstanding debits which the North and the South, and the black and the white, must pay all together, and each for all and all for each, and we must pay them in the temper of the cross. There are two great conflicting principles of social organization which are filling the air with their strife to-night. Standing before one of the stormy conventions of the French Revolution, Desmoulins enunciated—and great changes, tremendous, weighty and insistent, hung upon his words—"My creed," said he, "is the creed of every honorable man—no superiors!—no superiors!" And that is the immense and deadly leveling power of what some man has called democracy, the gravitation of things—as sure to pull society down to its lowest as the rivers pull the mountains down toward the level plains of the sea. And everywhere one finds the hint of it, and the portent and the dread of it. If you will take up the papers which report day after day that political contest which is being waged toward the East, one can find there the accent of the old heresy of Desmoulins, "No superiors!" prejudice, hatred and ignorance striving to pull down to its own dead level.

What shall one put over against that? Only the word of the Master: "I am among you as he that serveth." There is one thing that shall stand strong against all the downpull of social forces, and that is the Rock of Ages. When society is anchored there, society is anchored not only to that which holds but to that which lifts. For the cross stands for the expression of the other and the vital principle of democratic government—not "No superiors," but "No inferiors!" the heights stooping to the valleys, strength stooping to weakness, wisdom stooping to folly, love stooping to sin, God stooping to man. There is the series which finds no ending until it ends in the heart of the Absolute and binds the lowest of human need and human sin and human folly, to the throne of God himself. There is the force opposed against all the leveling facts of society—the living power of God's redemptive love. That is the force of the cross, and that has been the force of every conquering power which has made for life since time began.

We stopped this morning in Cleveland and looked for a little while into the interior of the Soldiers' Monument there, upon those bronze figures, and read for a little the almost interminable list of names upon the wall. We passed to-night under the Memorial Arch which guards most fittingly the door of your campus, and read there other names. To what army do they all belong? The army of redemptive love, the army of sacrifice, the army of the power that lives, the army of the power that saves, that has been since time began the conquering power. It is bound to be the conquering power still, and in the strength of that and in the hope of that we are met together to-night. The Church of God, because these things are true, has a right to speak with a certain high note of authority. There are certain things about which we are sure, which we have the right to say; and we have the right to say that the saving power in society lies in sacrificial love mediated through consecrated personalities. We have the right to say that in the contemplation of God, no man or no race, white or black or yellow or brown, is shut out from that mediation. We have the right to say that the purpose of God is that presently, by the exchange of life and light and love, every nation shall be caught up in the confluent tides of an utterly adequate redemption.

And declaring this our message and our faith, we have the right and the obligation to face it as necessity demands. We affirm our master faith, and we suit the exercise of it to the individual condition. We say to the North, as the North considers this problem, that the North would better temper vision with experience, that the North would better remember that the Negro problem alongside, and the Negro problem a thousand miles away, are two entirely different things; that the North would better remember that the Negro problem must be solved where it is; that the North would better remember that in an earlier day the North herself was not without blame; but that the North must hold fast all the time and at whatever cost, to the element of vision and of faith which has been, along with sacrifice and love, her contribution to the solving of this problem which belongs to us all together.

We may say, I think in all brotherhood, to the South, that the South would better temper experience with vision, that faith would better look a little bit higher and try to see the Negro not for what he is, but for what he is to become; that passion is not calmed by passion, prejudice dislodged by prejudice, hate soothed by hate, or fire put out by fire. We can tell them that even for them, in the handling of this immense and momentous question, there is no other law but the law of God dealing with His recreant children, the law of a tender but inflexible justice, the law of a great and brooding discipline and the law of the sacrifice which atones for all.

And we will say to the Negro that he must work out his own salvation; that, after all, the inner fitness is the prerequisite of the outer opportunity; and that if to him the outer opportunity was given before the inner fitness had been assured, he shall prove our faith by making himself fit. We will tell him what men sometimes forget, that liberty and equality are not quite the same thing, and that it is possible for a man to have the one and do without the other, and that after all, in the vast fields of life, equality and the seeking of it is the weakness, sometimes of great and sometimes of little minds; that we should be content to be what we are and what God has made us, and stand as we may to live our lives for what they are, for their strength and for their value. And then we shall finish that text and tell him to work out his own salvation, "For it is God that worketh in him both to will and to do of his own good pleasure." We will tell him that above the fires which light too often the horizon of his life, he shall see the flame of a happier and a higher dawn. We will tell him that even he may not escape the great law of life; that he must bear with what strength he has the burden of the weak and the stain of his own kind, and we must tell him, if he cries out against the pain and the agony of it, that his are not the only bleeding feet which have walked the way of sorrows and found it the road to life.

And we will summon all men to the foot of the cross as we tell them this and there we shall foregather. As we come together at the foot of the cross, we shall be taught, in the liberty of perfect obedience, to be the sons and the daughters of God. As we wait there, we shall be dowered once more with the spirit of mediatorial sacrifice. And as they gather there who are estranged and embittered toward one another, upon them shall come the peace of God. That shall be our mount of vision. That shall be our hill of inspiration. That shall be our source of strength, and in that sign we shall conquer!

BRIEF HISTORY.

Organization. The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846. It is distinctively a Christian missionary society to spread the gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity. It was organized with pronounced opposition to slavery, which then existed, and against all race and caste prejudice, which still exists. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the Amistad Committee, the Union Missionary Society, the Committee for West India Missions among the recently emancipated slaves of Jamaica, and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society for work among the American Indians.

In the foreign field, in 1854, its laborers numbered seventy-nine, located in West Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt among the Copts, Canada among the colored refugees and in North America among the Indians.

The home departments embraced two distinct fields, the West and the South. There were 112 home missionaries employed by the Association in 1860, fifteen of them being located in the slave states and in Kansas.

The missions in the slave states gave rise to some of the most stirring events in the history of the Association, which has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts, while slavery existed, to organize churches and schools in the South on an avowedly anti-slavery basis.

Among the Negroes. The crisis so long impending came at length, and the Union armies, entering the South in 1861, opened the way for the instruction and elevation of the colored people. The Association felt itself providentially prepared to engage in this work, and the first systematic effort for their relief was made by it. Large numbers of "contrabands," or escaping fugitive slaves, were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, Va., and were homeless and destitute. The Association, on the 17th of September, 1861, established the first day-school among the freedmen. That little school laid the foundation for the Hampton Institute which the Association founded later, and was the forerunner of the hundreds that have followed.

The Proclamation of Emancipation, dated January 1, 1863, insured the permanent freedom of Negroes who reached the Union lines. The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Norfolk the school of the previous year now numbered 1,200 pupils. Teachers were also sent to Newbern and Roanoke Island, N. C., to Beaufort, Hilton Head, St. Helena and Ladies' Island, S. C., and to St. Louis, Mo., and its force was scattered over the field held by our armies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.

Close of the War. Freedmen's Bureau. Boston Council. The year 1865 was marked by the close of the Civil War, by the establishment, by act of Congress, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the holding of a National Council of Congregational Churches in Boston, which recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted to carry it forward. The Association accepted the responsibility, appointed district secretaries at Chicago, Cincinnati and Boston, and collecting agents in other portions of the Northern states. It also solicited funds in Great Britain, and succeeded in securing that year a little more than the $250,000 recommended by the Council. Its receipts from all sources ran up from $47,828 in 1861 to $253,045 in 1866, and $420,768 in 1870.

But in the South there came a reign of terror under the infamous Ku-Klux-Klans—the Thugs of America. The colored people were often assaulted by mobs, dragged from their homes at midnight, and shot down in the streets. But there was no want of courage on the part of our teachers to enter or remain in the field; the number of teachers, which was 320 in 1865, was enlarged to 528 in 1867, 532 in 1868, and 533 in 1870.

Permanent Educational Institutions. It was during this very period that the beginnings were made for most of our permanent educational institutions. The Association must train the teachers and preachers for this people.

The Association now sustains as higher institutions: Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas, and Piedmont College, Georgia, together with forty-six normal and graded schools and fifteen common schools scattered over the South and among the mountains, one school among the Indians, twenty-one among the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific Coast, one in Alaska and one in Porto Rico. Educational and church work is also developing in Hawaii.

Theological departments have also been maintained in Howard University, Talladega College, Fisk University and Atlanta Seminary. Industrial instruction first began in southern mission schools in Talladega, Ala., and was early introduced into many of our schools and has been constantly extended. Talladega College, Tougaloo University and Joseph K. Brick Normal School have large farms. In all the larger institutions and normal schools mechanical arts are taught to the boys, and household work, cooking, sewing, washing, nursing, etc., to the girls. From these schools go forth annually hundreds of well-qualified teachers and ministers.

Church Planting. Simultaneously with the founding of these permanent institutions the Association began the planting of churches among the freedmen. They were formed mainly in connection with the educational institutions, and were intended to be models of true church life. The work of church planting has been pressed forward with a steady hand until the churches now number 238 located in nearly all the states of the South, among the Negroes, the Highlanders, the Indians and Chinese in the West, and in the island of Porto Rico, with fruitful results. Sunday-schools, temperance efforts and revivals of religion have been marked features in the work. Christian Endeavor Societies were promptly organized and have been rapidly multiplied.

Mountain Work. The early labors of the Association in home mission work were directed to the white people of the West and South. The mountain region of the Central South embraces West Virginia, southwestern Virginia, southeastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee and portions of northern Georgia and northern Alabama. It is 500 miles long and 200 miles wide, and contains a population of about 2,000,000, seven-eighths of whom are white. Churches, preaching stations and schools have been established along or near the line of railroads traversing the mountain districts, or in regions not yet reached by such communications, where thousands of Highlanders live. Schools, churches and missions are now established in the mountain regions of five Southern states. The schools give prominence to normal and industrial training, sending out each year a large number of well-trained teachers, who, taking charge of the district schools, are making them over after the best models. Strategic points are occupied by these institutions, such as Williamsburg, Ky.; Grand View and Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Joppa, Ala.; Saluda and Whittier, N. C. The preaching of an intelligent gospel and the establishment of Sunday-schools, Mission Bands, Mothers' Circles and Christian Endeavor Societies contribute greatly to the development of these interesting Highlanders in their domestic and social life as well as that distinctively religious.

The Indians. Some of the earliest labors of the Association were among the Indians. In 1852 it had twenty-one missionaries stationed among the Indians of the Northwest. Various causes conspired to the gradual diminution of these missions. But in 1882 an arrangement was made with the American Board by which it transferred to the Association its Indian missions in this country, and the Association withdrew from missions in foreign lands. At the time of the transfer the Association had missions in Skokomish, Wash., Leach Lake, Minn., and Spokane Falls. The transfer from the Board committed to its care the mission and school at the Santee Agency, Neb., Oahe, S. D., with outlying stations on the Cheyenne and White Rivers, and the mission and school at Fort Berthold, N. D. Since these missions and schools came under the care of the Association the facilities and force of workers have been increased, and missions have been added at Fort Yates, N. D.; Rosebud, S. D., and the Crow Agency, Mont. The churches number twenty-two, with a membership of 1,712. Schools number one, with 172 pupils. The out-stations number fifty-seven.

Alaska. Our Alaskan Mission at Cape Prince of Wales was formed in 1890. It it now entirely supported by the special contributions sent to our treasury for this purpose. In connection with the educational and mission work a herd of reindeer is in the care of a missionary. The report of our missionaries in Alaska presents a very hopeful picture of work among the Eskimos.

Chinese and Japanese in America. The American Missionary Association was one of the pioneers in mission service among the Chinese immigrants to California. It began the work as early as 1852. In 1874 Dr. W. C. Pond, pastor of the Bethany Church, San Francisco, was appointed superintendent.

The number of workers is fifty-nine, and schools twenty-one, located at Berkeley, Fresno, Los Angeles, Marysville, Oakland, Pasadena, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Ventura and San Francisco.

Over a thousand of these pagans have come into the Christian life, and a number of them have returned to their native land as missionaries.

The converted Chinamen have long desired the establishment of missions in their native country, to which, if they should return thither, they might resort as a Christian home, and from which they might go forth for mission work among their countrymen. The Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions, and which was organized in 1886, and commenced work in China in 1890, has already contributed above $15,000 to missions in China. With this they have established headquarters at Canton with property worth $40,000. They have also property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty years' lease of a good chapel in Ci Ning City, where they have organized a church.

Porto Rico. The American Missionary Association follows the flag. It did this in the Civil War, bringing the blessing of Christian instruction to the Negroes. It followed the same course at the close of the war with Spain. Porto Rico came under the flag and became a part of the national territory. The responsibility for the Christian instruction of the people fell with especial force upon our American churches. The American Missionary Association carefully investigated the field through representatives who were sent to the island. The need was found to be very great. There was an immediate demand for well appointed Christian schools for the instruction of children and youth and also for the preaching of a broad and free gospel to the people. In 1899 eight teachers were sent to this field to establish and maintain these schools, and an evangelist to preach the gospel as widely as possible throughout the island. Six churches, with 430 members, are now organized.

Blanche Kellogg Institute is located at Santurce, near San Juan, a strategic position for a large work. The pastors also hold a circuit of preaching stations through the eastern portion of the island, where there are scarcely any other missionary efforts. There is great need for increased income to the Association to met the demands of this large and growing field.

Hawaiian Islands. The Association, in 1904, by the urgent request of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, undertook to aid the latter in its entire work among the native Hawaiians, and the Chinese, and Japanese, in those islands. To meet the imperative demands of this important work the A. M. A. has pledged for this year the sum of $8,000.00. These demands will be seen from the following facts. The Hawaiian Islands consist of a group of eight inhabited and four uninhabited islands. They are situated 2,100 miles from San Francisco and 3,400 miles from Japan. The people of Hawaii are made up of native Hawaiians, about 40,000; Chinese, 25,767, and Japanese, 61,111. In religion the population is divided as follows: Buddhists, 40,000; Mormons, 4,886; Roman Catholics, 26,363; Protestants, 23,773. The Hawaiian Islands seem to have been providentially situated so as to form the training school of missionaries for the Orient. In the providence of God many Chinese and Japanese have settled here. Back of this work in Hawaii there lies the great field of missions in China and Japan. There is also every inducement possible in the line of home missionary responsibility to support generously this work in our new island territory. This is the gateway to Asia and means great things in the regeneration of that vast region.

Bureau of Woman's Work. Formed in 1883. It gives direction and efficiency to the various lines of womens' aid to the American Missionary Association. Women's State Missionary Unions and organizations co-operate in raising funds for the prosecution of the work of the Association.

Publications. The American Missionary magazine is issued in ten monthly numbers by this Association each year. It contains fresh information from the mission fields, the reports of importance of various committees and other matters of value to those studying these great mission fields. The magazine is published at fifty cents per year. It is generously illustrated, and presents in new form fresh material in each issue.

Congregational Work, the organ of all our Congregational societies, represents each month the work of the American Missionary Association.

A large number of interesting leaflets, bringing the most recent information obtainable, are also pubished. They are issued for general use and distributed as desired among those interested in these great national and religious problems.

COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Missions to report to the Executive Committee, at its regular meeting every month, such suggestions or proposed action as shall seem to it desirable for furthering the efficiency and economy of the missionary and educational work of the Association. It shall also have power to manage the current work of the Association assigned to it, subject to the general supervision and direction of the Executive Committee.

COMMITTEE ON SUPPORT.—It shall be the duty of this Committee to meet at least once in two months to consider methods of promoting a missionary spirit throughout the churches, and of securing from the churches and friends of missions by addresses and publications, and through the various district offices and agencies and otherwise, the amounts required for the support and constant enlargement of the work, and to report to the Executive Committee such recommendations as shall seem desirable.

Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee) and consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in May or June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its own work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Chairman of the three Standing Committees.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES may be appointed from time to time as required. Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee. All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

APPEALS.—Every appointee of the Association has the fullest liberty of appeal to the Executive Committee. Such communications shall be referred to the appropriate Committee according to the part of the field from which they come, for examination and a report on the matter involved, at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, when they shall receive careful attention in executive session.

ART. IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, except that which relates immediately to the Treasurer's department, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various Standing Committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient work of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of each member of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees, and to the Executive Committee, all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

All appointments of missionaries, whether they are to act as pastors or general missionaries, presidents and professors of chartered institutions, principals of high and normal schools, district secretaries, field superintendent and other agents, and all matters involving questions of property or affecting the policy of the Association, shall be referred to the Executive Committee for final action.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all money contributed or intrusted to the Association, and to give receipts therefor; to deposit it to the credit of the Association in such bank or institution as may be designated by the Finance Committee; to keep clear and accurate accounts of all sums received and expended by the Association; to make payments and remittances in accordance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to endorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purpose of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them; to conduct the correspondence relating immediately to his department, and to perform such other acts as are necessary to the faithful execution of the duties of his office.

His books of account and vouchers for payment shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

It shall be his duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee such financial business as needs their action.

ART. VI.—DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches and in other ways disseminate information concerning the condition and needs of the Association throughout the districts assigned to them. They shall also collect funds, and perform such other duties as may be required. They shall keep in constant conference with the New York office, and every month shall send to it, for the Executive Committee, a report of their work the previous month and of the condition of the interests of the Association in their several districts.

ART. VII.—CHECKS AND PAYMENTS.

All checks upon the bank accounts of the Association may be signed by (1) the Chairman (or Vice-Chairman or Temporary Chairman) of the Executive Committee (2), a Corresponding Secretary, or (3), the Treasurer. Any two of these signatures shall render a check valid, but no check will be valid with one signature only. All transfers of stock, conveyances of real estate and other instruments requiring the seal of the Association shall be signed in the same manner, except that the Treasurer may sign receipts for money and for legacies, when paid in full or on account, and, if required, affix thereto the seal of the Association. The Treasurer may also sign and affix the seal of the Association, if required, to any papers in any legal proceeding in which the Association may be interested when specially authorized so to do by the Finance Committee.

All payments of the Association shall be made by check payable to order, except petty cash expenditures, which shall be paid by the Treasurer and at convenient times be aggregated, and a check shall be drawn to his order therefor.

No disbursement shall be made without authority of the Executive Committee.

ART. VIII.—CLAIMS FOR DISBURSEMENTS BY OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

All claims for disbursements by any officer or employee shall be accompanied by vouchers, except for telegrams, postage and traveling expenses, and charges below twenty dollars in amount, all of which shall be certified by the claimant to the Treasurer, with the items.

ART. IX.—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The following shall be the order of business of the Committee at its regular meetings:

SIXTY-FIRST ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

American Missionary Association.

The Sixty-first Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in affiliation with the National Council of Congregational Churches in Pilgrim Congregational Church, Cleveland, O., October 14, 15, 1907, the sessions beginning at 8.30 o'clock Monday morning, October 14th.

The session was called to order by the President, Rev. Amory H. Bradford, D.D., New Jersey.

Prayer Service.

The prayer service, in which all sections of the many missionary fields of the Association united, was led by Honorary Secretary A. F. Beard, D.D, New York.

The Quartet sang.

Rules of Order.

It was voted: That the Rules of Order of the National Council be the Rules of Order for the sessions of the Association.

Financial Report.

The Financial Report for the preceding year was read by the Treasurer, Mr. H. W. Hubbard. The Auditor's certificate was read by Rev. Asher Anderson, Recording Secretary.

Annual Survey.

The Annual Survey was read by Mr. Charles A. Hull, N. Y., Chairman of the Executive Committee.

It was voted: That the Report be approved and printed.

Report on Finances.

The report of the Finance Committee was presented by Mr. John R. Rogers, N. Y., who also addressed the Association upon the "Need of the Hour."

Your Finance Committee beg leave to report as follows:

We find that following the practice of former years all financial transactions have been checked each month in detail by the certified public accountant under direction of the auditors.

The system of accounting used in the treasurer's office has been perfected by long years of experience, and it would be difficult to improve on the present methods which have safeguarded the funds of the Association all these years.

Expenditures	404,777.26
Leaving a balance of	$12,961.43
Which reduces the net debt of the Association to	$54,951.18

It is gratifying to note that the income from donations shows an increase of $14,231.22, to which add conditional gifts released during current year, $7,500.01, making an aggregate of $21,731.23 increase in income from the living, over the previous year.

We also note with pleasure that the receipts from the schools for tuition show an increase of more than $6,000 over last year.

Legacies, always a varying source of income, show a falling off for the year of $21,909.81, and we are again reminded of the wisdom of the Executive Committee in establishing the Reserve Legacy Fund.

The financial record of the year is encouraging, but there are numerous insistent calls that can be met only by a largely increased income, and your Committee feels called upon to urge upon all friends of the Association that in planning their benevolences and making their wills they remember that a largely increased income can be disbursed to meet such pressing calls effectively and with economy. In a word, the Association has the organization and experience to do a largely increased work without material increase in expenses.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE W. HEBARD, H. CLARK FORD,
B. H. FANCHER, JOHN R. ROGERS, } Committee.

It was voted: That the report and address be approved and printed.

Upon request of the President, the Hon. Justice David J. Brewer, Supreme Court, D. C., Vice-President of the Association, took the chair.

The Record of the Year.

The "Year's Record" of the Bureau of Woman's Work was presented by Miss D. E. Emerson, Secretary, N. Y.

Resolution of Thanks.

Resolved, That this Association expresses its thanks for the hospitality of Pilgrim Church, whose large and well-appointed building has been sufficient for the many and varied needs of our anniversary, to its pastors, Dr. Dan F. Bradley and Rev. E. S. Rothrock, whose untiring and gracious care of us all has anticipated our every want. To the pastors and members of the other Congregational churches of Cleveland, whose hospitality has been most abundant; to the pastor and members of M. E. Church, the German Evangelical and Zion's Kirche for the use of their buildings, and to President Charles F. Hone, of the Case School of Applied Science, who did so much to make the meetings at Gray's Armory a success, and to Mr. L. D. Thomas, of the Federation of Labor, who made so helpful the afternoon service on Sunday, and to the people of Cleveland who, by their attendance and sympathy, have done so much to make our anniversary one of high-water mark.

This Association wishes to express its grief in the sudden death, by accident, of Dr. Albert G. Hart, a member of Pilgrim Church, who, one year ago at Oberlin, invited us to meet here at this time. He was a surgeon in the Civil War, a member of the Board of Education, one of the founders of the Bohemian Mission, the senior deacon of this church, and a man of great ability and varied usefulness. He entered into rest at the ripe age of eighty-six, and his works do follow him.

Two sons succeed him in honorable public service, Dr. H. H. Hart, of Chicago, and Prof. Albert B. Hart, of Harvard University.

We also mourn the death, during our sessions, of Rev. W. E. Fay, an alumnus of Oberlin College and Oberlin Seminary, who has been for twenty-five years a missionary in Africa. He was not strong enough to endure the surgical treatment which was necessary, and entered into rest at one of the city hospitals yesterday. We mourn our loss, and express our sympathy with his family and the field where he was so useful.

It was voted: That the minutes of the sessions of the Association be referred to the Executive Committee for approval and printing.

After the Benediction by the President, the Association adjourned.

ASHER ANDERSON,
Recording Secretary.

SIXTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1907.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The problems which confront this Association have received an unusual share of popular attention during the past year. The Race Problem has, indeed, become universal. Not in this country only, but in Europe, Asia and Africa, the relation of the races, especially the relation of the more advanced to the more backward races, has become a subject of grave concern. The expansion of commerce and the extension of colonial systems have brought the most diverse peoples into close proximity, awakening slumbering nations to self-consciousness and self-assertion, and arousing prejudices and mutual resentments which threaten the peace of the world. Out of all this it is inevitable that new adjustments must come. What these shall be, and how they shall come, are the most portentous questions before the civilized world to-day. Will the Christian nations, with whom rests the solution of these problems, cling to the old methods of repression and selfish exploitation! Or, will the new sense of moral responsibility which is beginning to mark the dealings of the stronger toward the weaker races create new policies of action, by which the stronger shall help the weaker and bring them forward to a new estate! Shall it be the policy of Leopold or of John Hay! Put in that form, the question answers itself. The conscience of Christendom recognizes the brotherhood of man, seeks justice for the oppressed, and carries a burden of obligation in behalf of those who have fallen behind in the progress of the world. The hope of the future lies in the triumph of this purpose.

"Stronger than steel
Is the sword of the Spirit;
Swifter than arrows
The light of the truth is;
Greater than anger
Is love, and subdueth."

With the growth of this sentiment of humanity there has also been a deepening conviction of the organic unity of the human race. The latest science refuses to speak of races of men. It knows but one race, the human race, within which are ever changing varieties, now inferior, now superior, but lacking any inherent or abiding quality which permanently separates them from each other. Almost the last strong book on the subject, by a celebrated French scholar, has this for its last word, "The conclusion forces itself upon us that there are no inferior and superior races, but only races and peoples living outside or within the influences of culture." Applying this scientific principle to the international relations of the present day, he asserts, that "Peace among peoples, and the crown of such a peace—the vast solidarity of mankind, the dream of the future—can only triumph when founded on the conviction of the organic and mental equality of peoples and races."

In our own country this for some would be a hard doctrine. And yet there are gleams of light and rays of hope even here. A Southern lawyer said recently in the South, while discussing the Negro question, "In the Declaration of Independence Mr. Jefferson wrote 'all men are created equal.' That is to say, not equal in exterior circumstances, nor in physical or mental attributes, but equal in the sight of God and just, human law, in the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Americans want no recantation of that doctrine. It is the political corollary of the Christian doctrine of justice and the Fatherhood of God. Let it stand; as one of those ideals that have done more to lift up humanity and to build up civilization than all the gold from all the mines in all the world."

If such sentiments as these were universal the word and work of this Association would have free course, and the greatest barrier to the progress of a backward and dependent people would be removed out of the way. To quote from an editorial in our own magazine, "Were it not for the inability of the larger-minded and clearer-visioned white people of the South to secure the support of popular opinion there, the problem of two races living in necessary juxtaposition would be more readily solved. As it is, those who plead for justice and righteousness toward the colored people find themselves seriously handicapped by the political influence of those who have the votes. Demagogism and prejudice stand hand in hand to challenge the liberty of fair discussion and hedge the utterance of nobler minds with difficulties." The political campaigns in some of the Southern states during the past year have given abundant evidence to the truth of this assertion, and have depressed many. But at the same time, it is also apparent that better and wiser counsels are beginning to prevail. The South is demanding for itself a new leadership. The distinguished president of a Southern college recently ventured the assertion that "the day has forever passed when the builders of the South will applaud the voice of strife, when they will have pleasure in sectional hatreds and when they will admire the demagogue. What the South needs and what it wants to-day," he says, "is leadership that fully interprets the soul of progress. The new type of leadership that the South demands will have to stand for justice to all men, regardless of color or condition."

This we firmly believe; and in this faith we press on in our work of evangelization and education among the needy peoples of the land; confidently looking for the support and co-operation of all good men everywhere. The record of the past year is full of encouragement; and the "signs of the times" as we read them in the more advanced thought and the higher life of this and other lands, testify to the presence of God's Spirit in the hearts of men and give promise of the coming of a better day.

Our Southern schools last year numbered 77; of which 44 were schools of secondary grade with normal and industrial departments, and 6 were chartered institutions in which a more advanced culture was added to the secondary courses and the normal and industrial features were more highly developed. We had also four theological schools, two of them connected with our higher institutions. In these 77 schools were gathered 15,406 pupils under 551 teachers. These schools, white and colored, hold strategic positions in the states extending from Virginia to Texas.

With the opening of the school year, Dr. H. Paul Douglass entered upon his duties as superintendent of education in the South. He has been able to visit all of our principal schools, with one or two exceptions, and has everywhere been most cordially welcomed. His first attention has been given to our large secondary schools, in city and country, the most of which have long felt the force and accepted the truth of the Bushnellian dogma, "Obligation not measured by ability." His most urgent plea is for the enlargement of the plants of these schools, including new buildings and grounds, with increased facilities and additional teaching force for specialized work. He is giving much attention, also, to the more perfect adjustment of industrial training to the curriculum of the schools as a part of education, and considerable advance has already been made in this direction.

Negro illiteracy in the Southern states ranges from thirty-eight per cent. to sixty-one per cent. In at least one state the public instruction for colored children does not go beyond the fifth grade, and in most of the states the school year covers four months or less. School buildings are usually rude, frequently without desks, with few books and sadly incompetent teachers. In rural districts—and the population of the South is eighty-five per cent. rural—these conditions are generally prevalent. To provide better teachers for these schools, and to provide better and more advanced schools for at least a few of these children, is the effort of this Association. Thirty-seven of our forty-four normal and graded schools in the South are for the colored people. Eighteen of these, together with all of the twenty-three common or elementary schools, are taught by colored teachers. Thirty of them are in whole or in part maintained from the income of the Daniel Hand Fund. The Daniel Hand Fund is held in trust by the Association "for the education of colored people in the former slave states," and the income is applied by us in accordance with the will of the donor to the maintenance of schools and to individual student aid. It is only by means of this princely charity that we have been able to extend our system of schools and to furnish the opportunity for an education to hundreds of aspiring youth.

The past year has been a significant one in the history of our chartered institutions. Fisk University has had a year of great prosperity. Its new department of applied science, the current expenses of which are supplied by the trustees of the Slater Fund, has greatly strengthened the institution by its provisions for technical training. Talladega College has celebrated its fortieth anniversary. President Nyce, after a brief but brilliant administration, has resigned the presidency to re-enter the pastorate. Talladega still waits for the much needed donations to build its "Andrews Hall" for theological students and its hospital for the nurses' training school. Tougaloo University is overflowing with students, notwithstanding its large, new "Galloway Hall" dedicated last winter. Straight University continues its good work. Tillotson College has taken on new life and hope, and appeals loudly for a much needed addition to its group of buildings.

Your Committee is anticipating a general advance in our mountain school work during the coming year. Conditions are changing rapidly in the mountains, and educational readjustments are necessary to meet the requirements of the new era. Twenty-five years ago this vast mountain region was little known by the outside world, its wealth of forest, coal and iron was unappreciated, its people were isolated, poor and neglected, illiteracy was almost universal, and the brave and hardy stock of mountaineers of our own blood and lineage was shut out from any share in the general progress and prosperity of the nation. There are many spots still untouched by modern influences. Large portions of the country must ever remain secluded and difficult of access. But the tide of modern enterprise and ambition has moved steadily through its deep valleys and over its broad plateaus and has brought new life and new hopes. Railroads have been built, thriving villages have sprung up, schools have been established, homes have been improved, wealth has been developed.

Under such circumstances a readjustment of missionary effort often becomes imperative and inevitable. A self-reliant people, when they have once learned to do for themselves, wish to be independent and as far as possible maintain their own institutions. During the past year one of our important mountain schools has for this reason been transferred to the care of a local board of trustees and united with another institution. Williamsburg Academy, more recently known as Highland College, was the oldest of our mountain schools. The good it has accomplished is incalculable. It was the first school in the county, and it shone out as a light in a dark place. It transformed the intellectual and moral conditions of the people, aroused public spirit and stimulated enterprise. This is the history of many a northern school in that mountain country. But in this case, inspired by its influence, another school soon grew up by its side, representing more fully the prevailing religious sentiment of the locality. The two schools became rivals, and for years have been in sharp competition. As both schools developed, and advanced to the college grade, the expense of their maintenance greatly increased and the competition between them became the more unreasonable and burdensome, while at the same time they had come nearer together in their standards and ideals. The other school had a strong local backing with large financial resources. When the proposition came from them to unite the two schools they agreed to reimburse us for our investment, to receive representatives of our school on their board of trustees, to continue the majority of our teachers and to conduct the new institution in a liberal and unsectarian spirit. We did not feel justified in declining their offer. We had practically created another Christian institution, like our own, which the consecrated wealth of the community was able and willing to maintain from its own resources, and so relieve our overburdened missionary treasury. Our work in that particular direction was accomplished.

By this release of funds we are able to meet some of the urgent appeals which come to us for the development of other mountain schools, whose equipment and support are altogether inadequate to the demands upon them. Grand View Institute in Tennessee has lost its principal dormitory by fire; new and improved buildings are an absolute necessity, it should have more land for agricultural work and increased facilities for instruction in the manual arts and domestic science. Pleasant Hill Academy is over-crowded and under-supplied. Joppa Institute, in Alabama, has a wide outlook over a neglected region to which it must give a better ministry. Skyland Institute, in Blowing Rock, North Carolina, closed for two years because of lack of funds, is reopened. Brave little Black Mountain Academy, in Kentucky, must have the enlargement it so much deserves. Saluda Seminary, in North Carolina, is planning larger things for itself. Piedmont College, in northeast Georgia, is straining every nerve to secure the hundred thousand dollar endowment which will assure its future permanency, and the Association is now able to pledge ten thousand dollars toward this object. Atlanta Theological Seminary has given full proof of its ministry and hears the call to larger service. Will the friends of the Association give their generous support that these interests may be advanced as we hope they may during the coming year?

We have often wished that more of our friends could see our schools and churches, and judge of the work for themselves. An effort in this direction was made last winter, when a party of ladies and gentlemen chartered a special car and at their own expense visited a number of our Southern institutions. The result was more than satisfactory. Not only did they get a new impression of the character and magnitude of our missionary enterprise, they also carried encouragement and cheer to many of our faithful workers in the field and established sympathetic and helpful relations with the work which will not be forgotten. It is greatly to be hoped that such formal visitations may be often repeated in future years.

CHURCH WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Number of Churches	206

Church Members	11,351
Total Additions	1,069

The number of our Congregational churches in the South is not large, neither are the churches themselves comparable in strength with those of the denominations native to that section of the country. And yet, these churches of the Puritan faith, with their free polity, their traditions of human liberty, their high standards of intelligence and morality and their unsectarian spirit, have a mission of their own and exert an influence altogether disproportionate to either their numbers or their strength. Denominational propaganda has never been the dominant motive in our missionary work, but we have established and maintained many Congregational churches in the South, both white and colored, not only in connection with our missionary schools but in many places where the need was apparent and the opportunity was given to found a church in the spirit and faith of our fathers. We have now some 200 of these churches under our care, served by 125 missionary pastors.

Several of our colored churches have recently come to entire self-support, and have by this act taken to themselves new dignity and strength. Not one of these would return to its former condition of dependence upon others. This movement toward self-support has been encouraged by the action of Conferences and Associations, and has been the most healthful and hopeful feature of the year. Many of our churches are voluntarily assuming a larger proportion of their support, thus making gradual advances from year to year toward complete independence of missionary grants. The Louisiana Association has taken the lead in this good work. A few churches which had only a name to live have been dropped from our list, and their places have been filled by others which give promise of future usefulness and growth.

Our Southern white churches are for the most part, but not altogether, in the mountain regions. Special effort has been made during the past year to give new life and vigor to these mountain churches and the record of some, more particularly those in the valley towns, has been full of encouragement. Our mountain pastors are always held in high esteem and without exception wield a large influence in the community where they serve.

The most noteworthy event connected with our mountain work is the retirement at the close of the year of our faithful and devoted general missionary, Rev. Gilbert G. Walton, and the appointment of Rev. Charles A. Northrop to the oversight of these important interests. Mr. Walton has served the churches with rare fidelity for many years, uniting this service with the superintendency of Sunday School work in behalf of the Sunday School and Publishing Society. It has been thought desirable to have a man who should be able to give more time to the churches, counseling and encouraging them and assisting the pastors in evangelistic services, and also be at liberty at stated seasons to visit the churches of the North in behalf of the work, carrying a vital message of personal experience in missionary service. Mr. Northrop has during the past two years interested many of our congregations in the general work of the Association. With this new appointment he will be able to render a two-fold service, and, by both practice and precept, promote the interests of the Association.

Porto Rico continues to be an attractive and promising field of missionary effort. The number of our churches and ordained missionaries remains the same as last year, but there has been a decided change in church membership and in out-stations regularly reached by our missionaries and their assistants. Two additional lady missionaries have been in the field. Two or three new churches wait to be organized, when another ordained missionary enters upon the work.

The mother church at Fajardo has secured a convenient lot of land for a new parsonage. The Church Building Society has provided a substantial concrete building for the church at Humacao, admirably located, facing the principal plaza. Permanent work with resident evangelist has been established at Naguabo Playa, La Ceiba and Piedras. One of the most encouraging features of our Porto Rican work is found in the fidelity and devotion of those who, having themselves received the truth, voluntarily give their service for others in systematic house-to-house visitation and in evangelistic effort. As Andrew sought out Simon and Philip found Nathaniel, so these humble Christians carry the gospel message to their brethren and bring them to Jesus.

Blanche Kellogg Institute at Santurce closed its school term with the month of April, that the ground might be cleared for its new group of buildings, which are now rapidly approaching completion. Instead of the wooden structures originally contemplated, it seemed wise to your Committee to build substantially of concrete, as is most fitting in a tropical country, being assured that in the end this will prove to be the best economy. No more desirable site for a Christian school of commanding influence could be found in the island than was selected and purchased some years ago for this school in the attractive suburb of the capital city. The buildings are in the Spanish style of architecture; "Christian Endeavor Hall" contains the school rooms and teachers' home, and the adjoining "Adams Chapel" will provide for the only religious service in English now held in Santurce. It is expected that the buildings will be ready for use by the first of November, and the Association most earnestly solicits the three thousand dollars still needed to pay last bills.

Seventy years ago Dr. Stephen W. Riggs began missionary work among the Dakotas of the Northwest under the direction of the American Board. In 1882 the American Board transferred its Indian missions to the American Missionary Association and they were incorporated with the work we then had in hand. The story of the missions down to the present day is an impressive record of patient fidelity and practical consecration in Christian service. The missionaries now on the field have all of them, with two exceptions, devoted many years to the Indian work. The two veterans among them are the sons of Dr. Stephen Riggs; the two exceptions are sons of missionaries who have joined their father in the work.

The field is now whitening to the harvest. After years of toil the fruit is being gathered. One hundred and seven members were added to the Indian churches during the year and their proportionate growth exceeds that of the Congregational churches in the rest of the country. More significant still is the advance of these Indian Christians in intelligent character and missionary consecration. The contributions of the Native Missionary Society amount to upward of $1,000 per year. The society supports several native pastors and out-stations, and is now planning to establish a mission among the Utes, a heathen tribe recently located by the Government on the western side of the Cheyenne River Reservation. The Dakota Association of Indian Churches includes seventeen churches with more than forty preaching stations; some of these churches, like those at Grand River and in the Rosebud, consist of several branches united amicably in one church organization and thus form a true Congregational episcopate worthy of imitation. All these churches are on the reservations west of the Missouri River, from Santee in Nebraska to Fort Berthold in northern North Dakota. The Fort Berthold churches are connected with the Dakota Association although of different tribes—Rees, Gros Ventre and Mandan—each of these little tribes having its distinct language. The Crow Indians in Montana have as yet no church organization. The missionary holds regular services at the Agency and makes occasional preaching tours. There is at the present time much dissatisfaction and unrest among the Crows, with charges of injustice against the administration of the reservation. This is a great embarrassment to our faithful missionary and makes his position a particularly difficult and trying one.

The allotment of lands in severalty is proceeding steadily among all the tribes, and the time is not far distant when the whole reservation country will be open to settlement and the Indians will be no longer separate tribes cut off from the rest of the world, but will as individual citizens have their place and portion in the general advancing civilization of the country. This fact imposes unusual obligations upon us at just this time.

Our Santee Normal School is doing efficient work at this critical juncture of affairs. Although at a considerable distance from the center of Indian population and somewhat difficult of access, it maintains its high standards and exercises a wide influence. Its Correspondence School reaches 272 pupils, widely scattered through several reservations. We have special cause for thanksgiving in that Dr. Alfred L. Riggs, after a long and severe illness, is still able to retain his leadership of this important work. The school at Oahe has been efficiently maintained under Dr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Riggs, supported by private subscriptions.

ALASKA.

The location of our Alaskan mission at Cape Prince of Wales is strategic. The thrifty and well-ordered village is a gathering place for the Eskimos from Kotzebue Sound in the north and from Siberia across the Behring Strait. The mission was never more successful and promising than it is to-day. The church services are crowded, the exception being during the walrus hunting season, when the canoes get caught out on a change of wind and have to put ashore on the Diomedes. On Easter Day thirty-two adults were received into the church, making a total membership of 216. This church is reported to us by the missionary as "the westernmost Congregational Church in America and the North Congregational Church of the world."

The "industrial plant" of the mission is the reindeer herd. At last reports the herd numbered 2,209 deer, of which 638 are the property of the mission. The remainder, except those belonging to the "Board of Education," are owned by the twenty-five native herders. The sales from the mission herd have during the past two years paid all expenses connected with the care of the whole herd.

It is a great gratification to the Committee that the Rev. Mr. Cross and his daughter have consented to remain in charge of the mission another year and look after its important and varied interests. An urgent appeal has recently come to us from the pastor of the Congregational Church at Nome to send a native evangelist to minister to the many Eskimos in that vicinity.

The California Chinese Mission has outgrown its name. The new name now proposed is "The Pacific Coast Oriental Mission"; the orientals being Chinese, Japanese and Koreans, with the possible addition of Hindoos in the near future.

Interest has centered during the past year in the rebuilding of the Chinese Mission House in San Francisco. The undertaking is a great one, but some notable gifts have been received and Dr. Pond is laboring with an indefatigable zeal which in so good a cause should soon be crowned with complete success. The Chinese and Japanese missions and mission schools throughout the state have been well sustained. The Japanese congregation in Oakland has been organized as a branch of the First Congregational Church, with seventy members, and is preparing to build a house of worship. The Japanese of Fresno are building a mission house, and the Berkeley Mission has enlarged its borders. The mission schools have had a larger attendance than ever before. One hundred and eighty-two hopeful conversions are reported. One of the volunteer teachers in a Japanese mission school is a daughter of John Brown of Osawatomie.

A significant feature in the work is its extension into the states of Oregon and Washington. A Japanese evangelist has recently made a tour of the principal cities of these states in the interest of his fellow-countrymen. A Japanese Congregational Church has been organized in Seattle, where there are several thousand Japanese, among whom was found a goodly number of members of the Kumai churches of Japan. A Buddhist temple is being erected in Seattle at a cost of $30,000.

HAWAIIAN MISSIONS.

The Hawaiian Evangelical Association publishes its eighty-fourth annual report with the following dedication:

"To the Congregational churches of the United States of America—who, hearing the call from Hawaii in 1819, responded through the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions with the gift of a band of their noblest sons and daughters to carry hither the gospel of the Son of God, and who, in 1904, when these fair islands, thronged with alien populations and menaced with the propaganda of Mormon and Buddhist, summoned them to a second campaign of the Cross, generously commissioned new leaders and voted large appropriations through the American Missionary Association—this glad record of what God hath wrought is gratefully dedicated."

In this graceful way do the Christian people of Hawaii recognize our fellowship with them in a common service.

The administration of this work rests with the Hawaiian Association which furnishes by far the larger portion of the means for its support. We are helpers with them and sharers in their joy. Our appropriation last year was $8,000, and for the year to come has been increased to $9,500. Three American missionaries, laboring principally among the native Hawaiians, and some twenty Chinese and Japanese evangelists, working among their own people in the various islands of the territory, are assigned to the American Missionary Association under the grant made. A fourth ordained missionary provided for by us is to be sent out for special service in Sunday School work during the coming year.

Mid-Pacific Hawaii has become the meeting point of the Occident and the Orient. Here as perhaps nowhere else in the world are gathered the representatives of the most diverse civilizations. Thousands of children of Asiastic and mixed blood are in training for American citizenship. The contest between Christianity and paganism is being waged for the possession of these fair islands, which now lie within our borders and are under the protection of the flag of our common country.

FINANCIAL.

The receipts for current work of the year ending September 30, 1907, were $417,738.69, and the expenditures were $404,777.26. Amount paid on the debt $12,961.43. Debt balance at the beginning of the year $67,912.61. Debt reduced to $54,951.18.

The donations from churches and individuals were $204,539.31, an increase of $21,731.23 over the previous year. The estates were $125,198.90, a decrease of $21,909.81.

Besides these receipts, Securities have been received from the Estate of Elizabeth C. Bacon and from the Estate of Anson Chappell, inventoried at a total of $31,709.00 —which, as fast as they are sold, will be reported in current receipts.

RESERVE LEGACY PLAN.

The Reserve Legacy Plan of apportionment of legacies over a period of years has secured a more uniform support from the beneficence of persons who have remembered the Association in their wills. There has been reserved for the new year $37,898.35, and for the succeeding year $37,898.35.

THE CONDITIONAL GIFT PLAN.

Your Committee heartily commends The Conditional Gift Plan. It is proving very satisfactory to individuals who wish in their lifetime to make donations to the Association and to receive annually, in semi-annual payments, amounts which would be equivalent to an income from safe and secure investments. This plan relieves the donors from care and anxiety and they have the satisfaction of knowing that their donations are placed in the treasury of the Association. These conditional gifts, as they become available, are apportioned over a period of three years, one third of the amount being available for current work each year, the same as that of the Reserve Legacy Plan. The amount transferred to donation account the past year was $9,479.30. There was released during the year $27,000.00, one third of which, $9,000.00 was credited for current work of this year, and one third for 1907-08, and one third for 1908-09. The amounts in Conditional Gift Account September 30, were $191,991.56.

Your Committee has invested these gifts in interest-bearing securities during the life of the donors.

THE DANIEL HAND EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The Daniel Hand Income.

There has been received as income from the Daniel Hand Fund for educational work among the Colored People in the South the sum of $75,864.35, which with the balance of $4,995.08 on hand at the beginning of the year, made a total of $80,859.43. BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

Contributions through Women's Organizations show an increase of interest and effort in behalf of this field of missions. The total amount received through Women's State Unions and directly from local societies, $32,588.88, is a gain of $1,561.48 over the preceding year. Through our Woman's Bureau, information is sent frequently and circulated widely by printed matter and missionary letters. Every woman's organization, state and local, may thus come into communication with the field work in the most effective way. We invite and appreciate the co-operation of all women helpers in this work.

AMONG OUR CONSTITUENTS.

The Committee desires to express its appreciation for the cordial and generous co-operation of a large body of the churches and individual contributors who have united to the support of this work during the year which is just closed. It is a record-making year, representing the largest income from living donors that the Association has received for more than twenty years past. This has involved energy and faithful and persistent effort on the part of hosts of friends who have appreciated the great importance of the increasing work committed to this organization.

The year opened under somewhat unusual conditions. At the Sixtieth Annual Meeting in Oberlin last October, a vote was passed cordially accepting the apportionment of the Advisory Committee, which named the sum of $250,000.00 as a conservative apportionment from the constituency of the Association to its work. The action of the Advisory Committee, appointed under recommendation of the National Council, introduced a new element into our appeal. Through this committee the churches themselves had deliberately approved the amount that they believed this Association should receive from their treasuries and through the various avenues of church effort. This apportionment was cordially accepted by this body, a committee of co-operation was elected, and consistently and persistently through the year this appeal of the Advisory Committee approved by the National Council has been kept before our constituents.

The result has been, on the whole, encouraging. The full amount of the apportionment has not been reached. As the financial report indicates, however, $204,539.31 have come into the treasury from living friends. Some states have almost reached their apportionment. Many State Associations have organized, both by central committees and local conferences, and have pressed energetically toward meeting the amount of this apportionment. The experiment and the results are worthy of our generous Congregational fellowship.

In the analysis of the sources of income, our constituents will be impressed with the increasing amount which is coming from personal gifts. The churches in their stated collections have not greatly increased during the year. Individual gifts have largely increased. This points two morals. The first is, that upon the pastors there rests a serious responsibility in the presentation of the work of this Association in such form that the small contributor shall continue to give and to give with increasing generosity.

In the second place, this is a hopeful sign because it indicates that individuals of considerable means are interesting themselves personally in this work. This development is a symptom of the times and indicates hopeful things for the future. Instead of placing a small amount on the contribution plate, many send a personal check straight to the treasury. It is easy to give a small sum impersonally to a great work. It is not so easy to write a personal check for a few dollars when the appeal comes with all the emphasis which that of the American Missionary Association must always bear.

The resignation of Dr. W. L. Tenney, District Secretary in Chicago, closes his three years of vigorous and efficient service. While the return of Dr. Tenney to the local pastorate seemed providential, your committee regretted that it was necessary to lose him from this large service in the West. A special committee of the Executive Committee entered early upon a canvass of the question of an appointment for this district. In the selection of a man to fill this place it will be the effort of your Committee to maintain the high traditions of the office while recognizing the increased importance of this great Western District.

In special developments in the Department of Support, your Committee would mention with appreciation and approval the Young People's Forward Movement. A secretarial representative of this Association is a member of the board in direction of this movement, and we thoroughly approve of its work. The meeting at Silver Bay this year gave opportunity for the study of the work and peoples in the field of the American Missionary Association and the co-operation of the young people is of large value.

The American Missionary, the official organ of the Association, has been published through ten months of the year. The subscription has been fairly generous to this important periodical, and testimony to its value frequently reaches the office.

"Congregational Work" represents the united missionary activity of all our societies. During the year just closing, the list of paid-up subscribers reached the encouraging number of 32,000. This periodical is especially valuable among the churches where few papers are taken and in reaching the younger people in our fellowship.

The general literature of the Association has been sustained and improved. A growing demand for our publications is a wholesome sign. Many state and local libraries send requests for this literature each year, and keep it on file for reference of those who desire to study the great problems that lie in this field. The Association would soon lose its hold upon our present constituency and entirely fail to create an enlarged constituency without this somewhat abundant general literature.

In special movements we would recognize the cordial co-operation of the Christian Endeavor Society and individual contributors in their gifts for "Christian Endeavor Hall" at Blanche Kellogg Institute in Porto Rico. This building is in process of construction, as was stated earlier in this report. There is still demand for additional gifts of three thousand dollars that it may be completed. It will stand at the gateway of this island territory a monument to the generous interest of friends in Continental United States for the youth and young people in the Porto Rican territory of Insular United States.

Some of the pressing and immediate needs, and how they may be met, are presented in the following:

From two hundred dollars up the salary of a minister supplying a needy church in the South may be met. The pastor selected may be in the work among the Negroes or among the Highlanders. Four hundred dollars will support a teacher in an A. M. A. school for an entire year. A native evangelist in Porto Rico costs but three hundred dollars for his year's expenses. A Japanese missionary in Hawaii or on the Pacific coast may be supported for from three to five hundred dollars. A Chinese missionary may be provided for during the year by sending to the treasury from one to three hundred dollars for this purpose. Black Mountain Academy, in the Highlands of Kentucky, depends largely for its support upon contributions from our Sunday Schools. Pledges of twenty-five dollars each are solicited for this interesting school established for these Highland lads and lassies.

Several thousand dollars have been pledged by the citizens of Talladega, Alabama, and the Alumni of that college toward the erection of Andrews Theological Hall and Dormitory at Talladega College. Fifteen thousand dollars are still needed to complete the amount that this important building may be realized.

"We thank God, take courage," and press forward into this enlarged work.

With the continued sanction of the Advisory Committee and the success of the energetic efforts of the churches to bring up their gifts to the amount apportioned by that committee, and with all confidence in God and in our generous constituency, we pass out into the new year with the same watchword and appeal, "TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS FROM LIVING DONORS."

Obituaries.

In the death of Dr. A. P. Foster and Mr. Charles P. Peirce, both for a long time members of our Executive Committee, we are again reminded of the constant changes realized by those who continue in the work. Dr. Foster became a member of the Executive Committee while he was a pastor in Jersey City and continued to be active in this relation during his nine years' pastorate in Boston. Mr. Peirce, residing in New York, was often able to give special valuable service to the Association.

The American Missionary Association and Avery Institute have met with a great loss in the death of Principal Morrison A. Holmes, who died February 9th, 1907, at the Teachers' Home in Charleston, S. C. Mr. Holmes celebrated the twentieth year of his principalship in Avery the previous June. He took charge of this important normal school immediately after the earthquake in Charleston, S C. Year by year, under his charge, the school gained in well-earned reputation for high standards of attainment and for thoroughness of work, until it came to be known at the New York office as second to no other school of its kind in the entire system of educational institutions under the watch and care of the American Missionary Association. His influence will go on in hundreds of lives, and it will be for the good and good-will of both races. The Association unites with the people to whom he has given himself so faithfully for a score of years in cherishing the memory of a devoted missionary and one of the best of men.

Rev. Myron Eells, D.D., for very many years a missionary of the Association to the Skokomish Indians in the State of Washington, died on January 4th, 1907. We bear our testimony to his long and faithful service, marked by earnest Christian consecration.

Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga., keenly feels the loss of its matron, Mrs. George B. Hurd, who died suddenly December 8th, 1906. Mrs. Hurd was greatly beloved, not only by the teachers but also by the pupils and patrons of the school, in view of her absolutely unselfish devotion to the school and the people. Principal Hurd has the sincere sympathy of the people in his bereavement.

Miss Mary E. Wilcox, who recently died at Grand View, Tenn., had been an able and beloved worker in the Association for twenty-eight years. Miss Wilcox, who was related to the Fields (David Dudley, Cyrus W. and Stephen J.), was marked by an exceptionally strong character. She entered the work of the American Missionary Association at Selma, Ala., in 1873. She taught in Selma, Ala., for about twelve years, several years in Beaufort, N. C., as principal of a school, where her ability was specially manifested, and at Charleston, S. C. She was principal last at Andersonville, Ga. Her influence will long be felt in the schools where she labored with great fidelity.

Miss Mary Duren Hyde, who died November 20th, at the age of sixty-two years, had been a long-time worker in the service of the American Missionary Association. Her first work was in Gregory Institute, Wilmington, N. C., in the year 1883. She was thence transferred to Selma, and subsequently to Marion, Alabama. Her life had been one of sacrificial devotion in the interests of Christian education among the colored people.

Straight University and the American Missionary Association, alike, have been called to mourn the death of one of the teachers, Miss Edith Frances Bailey, who was appointed from New Hampshire, and began her work in New Orleans, in October. Miss Bailey entered heartily into her work, but was taken ill within two months after she entered upon it. She was an earnest Christian, unselfish and consecrated in doing her Master's will. Tender resolutions on the part of the teachers and students were sent to her parents, in which we sincerely unite.

There are many readers of THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY who will be saddened by the intelligence of the death of Mrs. Charles B. Curtis, better known to the teachers in our schools as Miss May Newton, who passed away in Kalmia, Alabama, January 3d last. Mrs. Curtis, born in 1863, was the daughter of a Congregational minister. Very early in life she consecrated her life to Christian service, and for many years was associated with Miss L. S. Cathcart, at Lincoln Academy, King's Mountain, N. C.

Mr. Henry W. Lee, an esteemed teacher in Ballard Normal School, in Macon, Georgia, died at his home in Atlanta, on June 10th, just ten days after completing his year's work in the school. He was a graduate of Atlanta University, and had formerly taught in LeMoyne Normal Institute, in Memphis, Tenn. He was an excellent teacher. His personal influence among the pupils was the very best. When such young men are the graduates of our colleges, those who work in them and for them should "thank God and take courage."

Among the earliest workers in the American Missionary Association, while the storm of war was raging, were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. L. Coan. This was in 1864. We find in our records that Mr. Coan was superintending a school at Norfolk, Va., numbering nearly four hundred pupils, and that the whole number connected with an evening school up to this date, had been about two thousand. These consecrated missionaries served several years. Four years ago the death of Mr. Coan was recorded, and on February 3d last Mrs. Coan followed him, after a devoted life, having lived to the age of eighty-five years. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

Deacon Charles Crosby, who died at Pepperell, Mass., July 31st, at the ripe old age of ninety years, was one of the original teachers in Fisk University when it began, and was a trustee in that institution for three years. His interest in the work of the American Missionary Association and friendship for the Negro continued during his long and useful life. He was a member of the Congregational Church in Pepperell for seventy years and a deacon of the church for more than fifty years. Thus has passed to his reward one of our oldest and most devoted workers.

Mrs. John Silsby, the mother of Prof. Edwin C. Silsby, of Talladega College, who died in Marysville, Tenn., on the 19th of August, was one of the earliest missionaries of the Association. Born in Northampton, Mass., in 1822, in her eighty-five years of life Mrs. Silsby witnessed a good confession. Married to Rev. John Silsby in 1845, she went with him to Siam in 1848 when this mission was under A. M. A. direction, being associated with Drs. Bradley, House and others. After five years' service, ill health compelled their return, bringing with them two sons who had been born in Siam, Prof. Silsby being one of those sons. The Rev. John Silsby afterwards was an officer in the Wisconsin battery in the Civil War. They came to Alabama after the surrender and were in the service of the Association in Selma and Marion, in Alabama.

OF THE

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK,

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

The Woman's Bureau of the American Missionary Association has not a separate work or treasury. The work of the American Missionary Association is one and undivided; one central administration, one treasury.

The mission of the Woman's Bureau is to aid in obtaining support for the work, to be acquainted with the field and its needs and make other women acquainted with it, to obtain and supply information through field letters, printed matter, public address and personal correspondence. This for so large a field must necessarily be done on a large scale. Our appeal is to Women's State Missionary organizations and auxiliaries, to all women's societies and to individual contributors; women who, controlling their own income, may be interested to personally forward this missionary work by their gifts.

The Women's State Unions, working at comparatively short range, each within its own district, aid efficiently, in organizing and strengthening local societies in the churches, in distribution of literature, and in assuming support of missionaries in the field. There have been received through the treasuries of the thirty-three contributing State organizations, $28,771.46, and from other societies paid not through the State Unions but directly to the field or to the A. M. A. treasury, $3,817.42, a total of $32,588.88. This is an advance of $1,561.48 over the previous year. Through their pledged work, the Women's Organizations have supported forty-six missionaries, have contributed toward the current support of mission stations, provided special equipment and scholarships, and, including the box help from auxiliaries, have been in touch with over seventy of the schools and missions of the American Missionary Association, ranging from Alaska to Porto Rico. We express our sincere appreciation of this co-operation, with gratitude to God for His blessing upon the efforts of the supporters as also of the field workers.

The field of the American Missionary Association is in every part attractive. It is picturesque, pathetic and appealing. And as a large portion of the work is in schools, dealing with child life, training the youth, building up the homes, it requires many women workers and naturally, also, should have many women supporters in the home churches.

It is a field of great variety. There is the South with its black belt; its millions of Negroes of slave parentage and grandparentage, now in all stages of progress on the first half of their long "obstacle race" toward the goal of highest freedom.

"Out of the wilderness, out of the night,
Has the black man crawled to the dawn of light;
He has come through sorrow and need and woe
And the cry of his heart is to know, to know."

It is the cry not only for himself, but for his children.

There is the South with its great mountain section; the frontier of the present day, with its fewer numbers, yet also reckoned by millions, of white mountaineers and lowlanders, handicapped by the isolation of their region, poor, proud, and deplorably ignorant, they, too, turning into the way toward mental and spiritual freedom. Our own privileges have been so many and of so high order, that our hearts go out in earnest desire to help these to so run that they may obtain.

But there are also the poor, half-civilized Indians of our country, some of them already dismissed from the asylum of Government wardship, all of them needing protection, enlightenment and encouragement to right living as wards of the Church of God.

And the Eskimo in their Alaskan peninsular of icebergs; the Porto Ricans in their island of palms and bigotry; the Chinese and Japanese—an overflow from the field of foreign missions—lodged on the Pacific coast, and in the Hawaiian Islands where America and the Orient meet and Christian forces must be greatly strengthened; these all come within the borders of the A. M. A. field, affording great variety in the study of missions, and peculiar interest in connection with the movement of our national life, historically and with current events of each new passing year.

The conditions vary with the race peculiarities. In the South we fight the same old dragons of evil continually, for the taint of slavery ran deep, but we now have the good results of work of past years as encouragement. We face race prejudice, sectarian prejudice and opposition, illiteracy and dearth of schools, the bigoted, unsafe leadership of ignorant ministers, but with an array of witnesses to the power of Christian education, a worthy leadership, that in the end must surely win, though the victory be not yet and possibly not even nigh.

There is in this field much of poverty with its painful limitations, much of disease and suffering, the penalty of sin. We meet paganism and plausible religions, "isms" and counter "isms," but the power of God's Word never fails.

Such conditions require methods of work as varied as the needs. They cannot be met exclusively by church and evangelistic work, valuable and essential as such work is. There must be also a system of Christian education, daily, through weeks, months and years, with a range of instruction touching every side of life from the humblest domestic relations to the largest public influence of leadership, whether socially, industrially, in civic life or in letters. Therefore, right here, in the work of the American Missionary Association, women teachers as missionaries, and women supporters, have open to them a field of great scope and responsibility.

We begin another year with new plans for promotion of interest and knowledge of the work. The new text-books for inter-denominational study, "The Citizens of To-morrow," includes several departments of the A. M. A. field. For denominational study, each text-book needs to be supplemented with the latest reports from the Mission Board. These we will furnish to all who apply; and we hope this text-book will be in general use this year in all our women's societies. It is very easy to combine the women's society with the Mission Study Class. The Woman's Society and the Class forming the Mission Study Club. Let us fall into line and be up to date in our methods of study this year. We have furnished three new programs on the year's course adopted by the Federation of State Unions and have in prospect other plans for more extended and thorough study of this work of the American Missionary Association. An intelligent acquaintance with the field is the surest way to impart interest and enthusiasm and win new friends to its support. Will not all leaders of women's missionary societies aid in promoting a wider and more accurate knowledge of this work and its needs?

The portion of this field assigned to the State Organizations for support is selected by the American Missionary Association with a view to meeting the most urgent needs in carrying forward the work. The amount the State officers can venture to pledge is dependent on the interest and liberality of auxiliaries.

Also individuals and societies not allied with State Unions can have their contributions specially assigned. Are there not women who will personally sustain their own representative in the field? And societies that will take shares? Sixteen shares at $25.00 each constitutes the support of a missionary, $400. A scholarship of $100 provides for both the board and education of a student for a year. Special needs develop to which sums ranging from $10 upward can apply. And to those who cannot spare much from their income now, yet as stewards hold their property in trust for missions, the Conditional Gift Plan provides a sure and satisfactory way of aiding this work.

Woman's work in the field of the American Missionary Association asks great-hearted, liberal support from the women in the home churches. We rejoice in that this year records financial progress, but does thirty-two thousand dollars from women's organized work measure up to the wide scope of this A. M. A. field or to our ability? Let us find in it only an incentive to larger gifts in the new year. For we know that in this year upon which we now enter we may surely expect, as expressed by Havergal:

"New mercies, new blessings, new light on the way;
New courage, new hope, and new strength for each day:
New wine in the chalice, new altars to raise,
New fruits for the Master, new garments of praise."

AUDITORS' CERTIFICATE.

We have employed Frederick C. Manvel, Certified Public Accountant of the State of New York, to examine the books and accounts of H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer of The American Missionary Association, for the year ending September 30th, 1907, and herewith submit his statement of the results of his work as a part of our report.

We have also made a careful examination of all bonds and other securities held by the Association and find the same to agree with the records in the books and balance sheet of same date.

The Treasurer's Bond was submitted to us and found to be in order.

EDWIN H. BAKER,
JOHN E. LEECH,
Auditors.

MR. EDWIN H. BAKER,
MR. JOHN E. LEECH, } Auditors.

GENTLEMEN:

At this, the close of the fiscal year of THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, ending September 30, 1907, I hereby report that I have audited and examined the accounts of the Treasurer of the Association and have found them all correct as shown by the books.

The same system and methods which have been noted and commended in former reports have been maintained. The detailed accounts have been carefully kept and have been examined monthly as to the clerical accuracy of the book-keeping. The cancelled checks for all payments have been compared with the entries in the Cash Book, the footings and postings have been verified, and the monthly reports and statements reviewed.

Certificates of balances to the credit of the Association have been obtained from the several Banks and Trust Companies and in each instance have been found to agree with the books of the Treasurer.

The amounts in the Trial Balance Sheet have been compared with the General Ledger and the Statement of Resources in the General Balance Sheet has been verified by a personal examination of the Securities by the Committee, in which I assisted.

I find the debit balance of last year of $67,912.61 in the Current Fund Account has been reduced this year by $12,961.43, which is the excess of the Receipts over the Payments in the current year, and makes the debit balance in this Fund at the close of the year $54,951.18.

Respectfully yours,
FREDERICK C. MANVEL,
Certified Public Accountant of State of New York.

REPORT OF THE EASTERN DISTRICT—1906-07.

REV. GEORGE H. GUTTERSON, District Secretary.

The financial year of the American Missionary Association ends the thirtieth of September. The one recently closed has been exceedingly prosperous in all respects, the financial receipts having been the largest for twenty years.

New England still continues to furnish for this Association, and for all the organized missionary enterprises of the denomination, the bulk of the needed funds.

The Eastern District consists of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. The receipts for the last year from this district are as follows:

From Maine	$4 950.90
" New Hampshire	6,151.82
" Vermont	6,639.72
" Massachusetts	51,688.13
" Rhode Island	1,367.53

This shows a total of gifts from the living of $70,798.10. This is the largest amount of any year during the last decade, and exceeds by $5,222.69 the amount of the preceding year. Every state in the district shows an increase except Rhode Island, which fell behind nearly $300.00.

The amount from estates during the same period was $77,863.19. This was a decrease of $25,806.73, compared with the amount received from estates in 1905–06.

In this connection it is interesting to note the following facts, namely, that the donations from the Eastern District for the decade ending September 30, 1897, were $813,167.29. For the decade just closed, September 30, 1907, they were $635,912.67.

In the former period the donations, for several years, went up to $90,000 and more, and in no one year were they less than $72,000. Only once in the last decade, namely, in the year just closed, have they reached even $70,000. Certainly this is not an encouraging report, for our Congregational churches in New England have not declined in membership during this period.

It cannot be that our Congregational constituency is declining in its giving power, nor can it be safely affirmed that it is losing interest in the great work of the Association for the Negro race, a work which certainly grows more fruitful and encouraging and also vastly more urgent as the conditions change in the South.

This decline in gifts is probably accounted for by several facts, among which are the increasing demands of the home missionary problems in the New England states themselves, where vast social changes are taking place and where almost whole estates are being transformed into foreign missionary areas, and the old New England protestant stock, for one reason or another, steadily losing in number; and another reason that may be noted for the decline in gifts, is the increasing number of independent institutions planted in the South; and their claims upon givers.

Congregational churches should take hold of this matter. Many of these independent colored schools are, doubtless, doing excellent work. Some of them should seek support from the denomination whose name they bear, and whose constituency they labor among. Some of them are not strategically placed and the need of them might be questioned.

Even if granted that all are necessary and are economically administered, it is a pertinent question whether our Congregational churches should not generously support their own Association which, in the midst of great danger and hardship, went into the South, originated Industrial Training for the Negro, and to-day has, without doubt, the best and most economically administered, not to mention the most thoroughly missionary schools in the South.

To return to the financial response which New England makes to the call of the American Missionary Association, it may be said that the receipts from estates, that is, the money left in wills to the Association, has almost saved the record for the last decade, the total amount being $599,619.97. This is a gain of $136.377.75 over the amount received from the same source during the preceding decade.

The total of estates for these decades are as follows: 1887–1897, $463,242.22; 1897–1907, $599,619.97. These are certainly splendid gifts and make us truly thankful for the hearty interest and the cordial suppport thus evidenced.

In the midst of our gratitude we are forced to ask a question, whether we are to see steady decline during the next ten years.

The call comes to the churches to increase the donations to this great work, bringing them back, if possible, to the record of the 80's and 90's. Let us have $90,000 a year from the donations in the Eastern District, being grateful, of course, for those who remember us in their wills, but submitting that the real burden must fall upon the living. The American Missionary Association has had sixty years of splendid history. Its methods are up-to-date, its financial management is unchallenged and there is no better medium through which the denomination can do its work for eight different races, gathered in their schools and churches, from Alaska and Hawaii, on the West, to Porto Rico, on the East.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF WOMAN'S CONGREGATIONAL STATE HOME MISSIONARY ORGANIZATIONS.

The second year in the existence of the Federation has been marked with success. The annual meeting at Cleveland, in October, was attended by representative young women from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Texas to the Great Lakes.

Owing to the great variety of ways in which our Congregational women give their Home Missionary money, it is impossible to know definitely the amount raised by them during the year, but it was not far from $140,000. Reports from the various States show a decided increase this last year both in interest and gifts. The Federation continues to use Congregational Work as its organ, in which programs for the year will be found.

As a denomination we unite with women of other churches in the United Study of Home Missions; the book recommended for 1908 being "Citizens of To-morrow."

The "citizens of to-morrow" are the boys and girls of to-day—Indian, Negro, Alaskan, Porto Rican, Anglo-Saxon, the varied races and nationalities that make up this complex nation. To these, even if not made legal citizens, must be added the Chinese and Japanese who constitute a part of the body politic. What qualifications have all these, by birth and environment, for American citizenship? What is needed to fit them for the future? These are the questions presented and to some extent answered in this book.

It will be readily seen that a systematic study of this book will bring us into a more appreciative relation with the work of our own National Homeland Societies, to all of which we are auxiliary. Directly or indirectly we are helping train our citizens of to-morrow. Will they be a credit to us? It is the ambition of the Federation officers to come into contact with every State organization, and by the bonds of fellowship, if nothing more, raise the standard of Home Missionary endeavor among the Congregational women of the country.

During the past two years the President has spoken in twenty States. Eight new organizations have become affiliated with the Federation during the last year and several more are soon to be added.

It is hoped that the day is not far distant when we shall claim in our roll call every State that has a Woman's Home Missionary organization.

The officers of the Federation for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. B. W. Firman, 1012 Iowa Street, Oak Park, Illinois; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. James L. Hill, Salem, Mass.; Mrs. F. Eggert, Portland, Ore.; Mrs. H. B. Wey, Atlanta, Ga.; Secretary, Mrs. G. H. Schneider, 919 Warren Avenue, Chicago, Ill.; Treasurer, Mrs. H. A. Flint, 604 Willis Avenue, Syracuse, N. Y.

In an unofficial capacity Mrs. Caswell Broad is to act as the Federation's Field Secretary in whatever parts of the country she may visit this year.

Following is a list of the organizations now federated: Alabama, California (Northern), California (Southern), Colorado, Connecticut, North Dakota, South Dakota, Florida (including Georgia Mission Circle), Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin.

BRIEF HISTORY.

Organization. The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846. It is distinctively a Christian missionary society to spread the gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity. It was organized with pronounced opposition to slavery, which then existed, and against all race and caste prejudice, which still exists. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the Amistad Committee, the Union Missionary Society, the Committee for West India Missions among the recently emancipated slaves of Jamaica, and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society for work among the American Indians.

In the foreign field, in 1854, its laborers numbered seventy-nine, located in West Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt among the Copts, Canada among the colored refugees and in North America among the Indians.

The home departments embraced two distinct fields, the West and the South. There were 112 home missionaries employed by the Association in 1860, fifteen of them being located in the slave states and in Kansas.

The missions in the slave states gave rise to some of the most stirring events in the history of the Association, which has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts, while slavery existed, to organize churches and schools in the South on an avowedly anti-slavery basis.

Among the Negroes. The crisis so long impending came at length, and the Union armies, entering the South in 1861, opened the way for the instruction and elevation of the colored people. The Association felt itself providentially prepared to engage in this work, and the first systematic effort for their relief was made by it. Large numbers of "contrabands," or escaping fugitive slaves, were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, Va., and were homeless and destitute. The Association, on the 17th of September, 1861, established the first day-school among the freedmen. That little school laid the foundation for the Hampton Institute which the Association founded later, and was the forerunner of the hundreds that have followed.

The Proclamation of Emancipation, dated January 1, 1863, insured the permanent freedom of Negroes who reached the Union lines. The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Norfolk the school of the previous year now numbered 1,200 pupils. Teachers were also sent to Newbern and Roanoke Island, N. C., to Beaufort, Hilton Head, St. Helena and Ladies' Island, S. C., and to St. Louis, Mo., and its force was scattered over the field held by our armies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.

Close of the War. Freedmen's Bureau. Boston Council. The year 1865 was marked by the close of the Civil War, by the establishment, by act of Congress, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the holding of a National Council of Congregational Churches in Boston, which recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted to carry it forward. The Association accepted the responsibility, appointed district secretaries at Chicago, Cincinnati and Boston, and collecting agents in other portions of the Northern states. It also solicited funds in Great Britain, and succeeded in securing that year a little more than the $250,000 recommended by the Council. Its receipts from all sources ran up from $47,828 in 1861 to $253,045 in 1866, and $420,768 in 1870.

But in the South there came a reign of terror under the infamous Ku-Klux-Klans—the Thugs of America. The colored people were often assaulted by mobs, dragged from their homes at midnight, and shot down in the streets. But there was no want of courage on the part of our teachers to enter or remain in the field; the number of teachers, which was 320 in 1865, was enlarged to 528 in 1867, 532 in 1868, and 533 in 1870.

Permanent Educational Institutions. It was during this very period that the beginnings were made for most of our permanent educational institutions. The Association must train the teachers and preachers for this people.

The Association now sustains as higher institutions: Fisk University, Tennessee; Talladega College, Alabama; Tougaloo University, Mississippi; Straight University, Louisiana; Tillotson College, Texas, and Piedmont College, Georgia, together with forty-four normal and graded schools and twenty-three common schools scattered over the South and among the mountains, one school among the Indians, twenty-one among the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific Coast, one in Alaska and one in Porto Rico. Educational and church work is also developing in Hawaii.

Theological departments have also been maintained in Howard University, Talladega College, Fisk University and Atlanta Seminary. Industrial instruction first began in southern mission schools in Talladega, Ala., and was early introduced into many of our schools and has been constantly extended. Talladega College, Tougaloo University and Joseph K. Brick Normal School have large farms. In all the larger institutions and normal schools mechanical arts are taught to the boys, and household work, cooking, sewing, washing, nursing, etc., to the girls. From these schools go forth annually hundreds of well-qualified teachers and ministers.

Church Planting. Simultaneously with the founding of these permanent institutions the Association began the planting of churches among the freedmen. They were formed mainly in connection with the educational institutions, and were intended to be models of true church life. The work of church planting has been pressed forward with a steady hand until the churches now number 231 located in nearly all the states of the South, among the Negroes, the Highlanders, the Indians and Chinese in the West, and in the island of Porto Rico, with fruitful results. Sunday-schools, temperance efforts and revivals of religion have been marked features in the work. Christian Endeavor Societies were promptly organized and have been rapidly multiplied.

Mountain Work. The early labors of the Association in home mission work were directed to the white people of the West and South. The mountain region of the Central South embraces West Virginia, southwestern Virginia, southeastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee and portions of northern Georgia and northern Alabama. It is 500 miles long and 200 miles wide, and contains a population of about 2,000,000, seven-eighths of whom are white. Churches, preaching stations and schools have been established along or near the line of railroads traversing the mountain districts, or in regions not yet reached by such communications, where thousands of Highlanders live. Schools, churches and missions are now established in the mountain regions of five Southern states. The schools give prominence to normal and industrial training, sending out each year a large number of well-trained teachers, who, taking charge of the district schools, are making them over after the best models. Strategic points are occupied by these institutions, such as Evarts, Ky.; Grand View and Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Joppa, Ala.; Saluda and Blowing Rock, N. C. The preaching of an intelligent gospel and the establishment of Sunday-schools, Mission Bands, Mothers' Circles and Christian Endeavor Societies contribute greatly to the development of these interesting Highlanders in their domestic and social life as well as that distinctively religious.

The Indians. Some of the earliest labors of the Association were among the Indians. In 1852 it had twenty-one missionaries stationed among the Indians of the Northwest. Various causes conspired to the gradual diminution of these missions. But in 1882 an arrangement was made with the American Board by which it transferred to the Association its Indian missions in this country, and the Association withdrew from missions in foreign lands. At the time of the transfer the Association had missions in Skokomish, Wash., Leach Lake, Minn., and Spokane Falls. The transfer from the Board committed to its care the mission and school at the Santee Agency, Neb., Oahe, S. D., with outlying stations on the Cheyenne and White Rivers, and the mission and school at Fort Berthold, N. D. Since these missions and schools came under the care of the Association the facilities and force of workers have been increased, and missions have been added at Fort Yates, N. D.; Rosebud, S. D., and the Crow Agency, Mont. The churches number eighteen, with a membership of 1,477. Schools number one, with 395 pupils. The out-stations number fifty-seven.

Alaska. Our Alaskan Mission at Cape Prince of Wales was formed in 1890. It it now entirely supported by the special contributions sent to our treasury for this purpose. In connection with the educational and mission work a herd of reindeer is in the care of a missionary. The report of our missionaries in Alaska presents a very hopeful picture of work among the Eskimos.

Chinese and Japanese in America. The American Missionary Association was one of the pioneers in mission service among the Chinese immigrants to California. It began the work as early as 1852. In 1874 Dr. W. C. Pond, pastor of the Bethany Church, San Francisco, was appointed superintendent.

The number of workers is sixty, and schools twenty-one, located at Berkeley, Fresno, Los Angeles, Marysville, Oakland, Pasadena, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Ventura and San Francisco.

Over a thousand of these pagans have come into the Christian life, and a number of them have returned to their native land as missionaries.

The converted Chinamen have long desired the establishment of missions in their native country, to which, if they should return thither, they might resort as a Christian home, and from which they might go forth for mission work among their countrymen. The Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions, and which was organized in 1886, and commenced work in China in 1890, has already contributed above $15,000 to missions in China. With this they have established headquarters at Canton with property worth $40,000. They have also property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty years' lease of a good chapel in Ci Ning City, where they have organized a church.

Porto Rico. The American Missionary Association follows the flag. It did this in the Civil War, bringing the blessing of Christian instruction to the Negroes. It followed the same course at the close of the war with Spain. Porto Rico came under the flag and became a part of the national territory. The responsibility for the Christian instruction of the people fell with especial force upon our American churches. The American Missionary Association carefully investigated the field through representatives who were sent to the island. The need was found to be very great. There was an immediate demand for well appointed Christian schools for the instruction of children and youth and also for the preaching of a broad and free gospel to the people. In 1899 eight teachers were sent to this field to establish and maintain these schools, and an evangelist to preach the gospel as widely as possible throughout the island. Six churches, with 481 members, are now organized.

Blanche Kellogg Institute is located at Santurce, near San Juan, a strategic position for a large work. The pastors also hold a circuit of preaching stations through the eastern portion of the island, where there are scarcely any other missionary efforts. There is great need for increased income to the Association to meet the demands of this large and growing field.

Hawaiian Islands. The Association, in 1904, by the urgent request of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, undertook to aid the latter in its entire work among the native Hawaiians, and the Chinese, and Japanese, in those islands. To meet the imperative demands of this important work the A. M. A. has pledged for this year the sum of $9,500.00. These demands will be seen from the following facts. The Hawaiian Islands consist of a group of eight inhabited and four uninhabited islands. They are situated 2,100 miles from San Francisco and 3,400 miles from Japan. The people of Hawaii are made up of native Hawaiians, about 40,000; Chinese, 25,767, and Japanese, 61,111. In religion the population is divided as follows: Buddhists, 40,000; Mormons, 4,886; Roman Catholics, 26,363; Protestants, 23,773. The Hawaiian Islands seem to have been providentially situated so as to form the training school of missionaries for the Orient. In the providence of God many Chinese and Japanese have settled here. Back of this work in Hawaii there lies the great field of missions in China and Japan. There is also every inducement possible in the line of home missionary responsibility to support generously this work in our new island territory. This is the gateway to Asia and means great things in the regeneration of that vast region.

Bureau of Woman's Work. Formed in 1883. It gives direction and efficiency to the various lines of womens' aid to the American Missionary Association. Women's State Missionary Unions and organizations co-operate in raising funds for the prosecution of the work of the Association.

Publications. The American Missionary magazine is issued in ten monthly numbers by this Association each year. It contains fresh information from the mission fields, the reports of importance of various committees and other matters of value to those studying these great mission fields. The magazine is published at fifty cents per year. It is generously illustrated, and presents in new form fresh material in each issue.

Congregational Work, the organ of all our Congregational societies, represents each month the work of the American Missionary Association.

A large number of interesting leaflets, bringing the most recent information obtainable, are also pubished. They are issued for general use and distributed as desired among those interested in these great national and religious problems.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to employ an expert accountant to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with the statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statements when approved by the accountant. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee) and consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in May or June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its own work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Chairman of the three Standing Committees.

STANDING COMMITTEES can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee. SPECIAL COMMITTEES may be appointed from time to time as required. All appointments of missionaries, whether they are to act as pastors or general missionaries, presidents and professors of chartered institutions, principals of high and normal schools, district secretaries, field superintendent and other agents, and all matters involving questions of property or affecting the policy of the Association, shall be referred to the Executive Committee for final action.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

His books of account and vouchers for payment shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

AIM, WORK AND FIELD.

To preach the gospel to the poor. It originated in a sympathy with the almost friendless slaves, and in its work recognizes no distinction of race or color. Since emancipation, it has devoted its main efforts to the South, endeavoring to prepare the NEGROES for their duties as citizens and Christians in America, and as missionaries in Africa. It also establishes missions and schools among the WHITES, especially in the mountain districts. As closely related to this, it seeks to benefit the CHINESE and JAPANESE in America, and to extend the blessings of the gospel and civilization to the INDIANS of North America. It conducts churches, schools and missions in Alaska, Porto Rico and Hawaii. In view of the necessity of elevating the WOMEN of these races, the Association has a BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK, to which it especially invites the co-operation of the Christian women of the churches.

MEMBERSHIP.

A payment of THIRTY DOLLARS will constitute a person a life member. (See Article III of the Constitution.)

LEGACIES.

Important legacies have been lost to the Association by informality. Care should be taken to give full name, "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION." The following form of bequest may be used:

I GIVE AND BEQUEATH the sum of———dollars to "The American Missionary Association," incorporated by act of Legislature of the State of New York.

The will should be attested by three witnesses (in some states three are required—in other states only two), who should write against their names their places of residence (if in cities the street and number). The following form of attestation will answer for every State in the Union: "Signed, sealed, published and declared by the said (A. B.,) as his last will and testament in the presence of us, who at the request of said (A. B.,) and in his presence, and in the presence of each other have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses." In some states it is required that charitable bequests should be made at least two months before the death of the testator; but this rule does not apply to bequests in the State of New York to this Association.

Recommendation.

The following Recommendation and Resolution offered by Rev. P. S. Moxom, were adopted:

The 12th day of February, 1909, marks the One Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. In view of the fact that the American Missionary Association in almost every department of its work articulates itself with the life and deeds of our martyred President, and that this Association was the first to recommend to the Christian churches of America the observance of an annual Lincoln Memorial Sunday which has been continuously celebrated by our Congregational churches for fourteen years, and especially in this city of Galesburg in which our Sixty-second Annual Meeting gathers, where the great debate of Lincoln and Douglas aroused the entire nation to the dangers and horrors of American slavery, and did perhaps more than any other thing to bring about their freedom, it seems most appropriate that special action should be taken with regard to the One Hundredth Anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth.

Therefore, we, the delegates and representatives of the churches gathered at the Sixty-second Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association do earnestly recommend to all our churches the observance of Lincoln Memorial Sunday on February 7, 1909, and urge every pastor to preach an appropriate sermon commemorative of this great American upon this One Hundredth Anniversary of his birth.

We urge also that a Lincoln Memorial Fund be gathered from every Congregational Sunday School and Young People's Society or other similar organization for the work of the Association among the American Highlanders, among whom, in a mountain cabin in Kentucky, Abraham Lincoln was born, February 12, 1809; and among the Negroes whom he released from slavery by the Emancipation Proclamation, and among the Indians of the prairie whose rights under Christian government he was, as president, eager to recognize.

Thus by suitable public service on the Sabbath and generous contributions to the Lincoln Memorial Fund our Christian churches represented here will unite with other patriots of the nation in the commemoration of the One Hundredth birthday of America's greatest President.

An address upon the work of the First Church, Atlanta, Ga., was made, upon request, by Rev. H. H. Proctor, pastor of the church.

Business Session.

The Committee on Resolutions presented the following report:

1. Recognizing the untiring devotion with which the pastors and membership of this Central Church, and of the East Main Street Church, the President and Faculty of Knox College and the citizens of Galesburg, have labored to make this Sixty-second Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association a success, and the cordial and hearty manner in which they have received us in their homes and hearts, this Association desires to express its deep appreciation of their generous and kindly efforts. We shall remember with sincere gratitude their splendid service of love.

2. The Chartered Institutions of the American Missionary Association, especially Fisk, Talladega, and Tougaloo Universities, Piedmont College and Atlanta Theological Seminary are doing a noble and splendid work with their present equipment. Their equipment and resources are utterly inadequate to the present pressing demands, and the increasing opportunities unfolding before them. At a former meeting a committee from the Executive Committee was appointed to take up the matter of adequate endowment for these institutions. The reasons for this step are the imperative need, the magnificent opportunity and the desirability of releasing the $40,000 of current income now set apart for these institutions, for other pressing work.

The celebration of the Lincoln Centennial next year offers a peculiarly fitting occasion for pressing this work to a successful conclusion. This Association in its Sixty-second Annual Meeting desires in the most emphatic manner possible to urge the imperative necessity of adequately endowing these institutions, and that immediate steps be taken, in connection with the committee already appointed, to accomplish this most desirable end.

Remembering with gratitude the Pioneers of Congregationalism and their good work in this western part of the country, Illinois and Iowa especially, and that there is now living in the city of Burlington, Ia., the sole survivor of the Iowa Band, the Rev. William Salter, D.D., and knowing of his deep interest in the work of the Association, therefore be it resolved:

That we extend our greeting of appreciation for his splendid services in the interests of this Association in past years. We esteem his life an incarnation of the spirit of Brotherhood which unselfishly and nobly has dedicated strength, time, talents, means to the freedom and service of his fellowmen. May the Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon him and may he see the increasing fulfillment of the visions of his earlier years.

Respectfully submitted,
F. M. SHELDON,
H. W. PORTER,
H. F. MILLIGAN.

Report of Finance Committee.

The Committee on Finance, through Mr. C. T. Willard, presented the following report, which was adopted:

To the American Missionary Association:

Your Finance Committee begs leave to report as follows:

We find that all the financial transactions have been checked each month by a certified Public Accountant, under the direction of the Auditors, in accordance with the usual custom, and that the system of accounting employed in the Treasurer's office is complete and carefully adhered to.

The report for the past year shows:

Current receipts	$387,728.81
Expenditures	379,695.55
Leaving a balance of	8,033.26
Which reduces the debt of the Association to	$46,917.92

It is gratifying to know that for the third year in succession the Association has closed its year with a credit balance reducing the debt to $46,917.92, as stated above, but in order to accomplish this we note that it has been necessary to decrease the expenditures $25,081.71, owing to the decreased income of $30,009.88.

It is to be regretted that it has been necessary to reduce the appropriation in the different mission fields, to the extent of about $21,000.00, when there is so great a need for more money, instead of less, successfully to carry on the work.

It is interesting to note the loyalty of the Women's Societies, donations from which show an increase of $1,471.68 over those of the previous year, notwithstanding the financial stress through which the country has so recently passed.

We earnestly commend the Association to the generosity and loyal support of all who are interested in the splendid work which the American Missionary Association is doing in all its fields.

Respectfully submitted,

B. H. FANCHER,
JOHN R. ROGERS, } Finance Committee.

New York, October 14, 1908.

Notice of Amendment.

The following addition to Article V of the Constitution was presented for action at the next meeting:

SIXTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION,

COVERING THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1908.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The sixty-second year of the American Missionary Association has been a year of honest endeavor to do our work thoroughly and well, and not incur additional debt. We have been successful in the latter,—we have not added to our debt, we have reduced it; but this has been accomplished at the expense of the work, for we have reduced that also. We have spent twenty-five thousand dollars less than in the previous year, and are eight thousand dollars to the good. We have not done those things that we ought not to have done, but we have left undone those things which we ought to have done.

The extent and variety of our work, the demands it makes upon us and the rich blessings with which it is being crowned, are not to be measured by the history of a year; and it would of course be impossible in this or any report to make even an approximately adequate showing of that single year; but in the report we are about to make we shall call your attention to a good many details, to facts, incidents and illustrations, in the hope that from these a vivid and concrete impression of the whole work can be obtained. Our Annual Survey instead of being in general will be in particular.

The tabulated report of our Southern schools shows four theological seminaries, four colleges, twenty-nine secondary schools, eleven elementary, four affiliated and twenty-seven ungraded schools, making a total of seventy-three. This is a new classification based upon existing conditions. Only such institutions are classed as colleges as have during the past year, in addition to secondary and elementary courses, maintained regular college courses with candidates for a degree. The total number of students of college grade is 178, while the students of secondary or high school grade number 1,896, and of lower grades 12,305. Thirty of these schools are boarding schools with 2,546 boarding students. Altogether we have in our Southern institutions, of all sorts, 15,028 students, with 560 instructors. This is a slight falling off from the previous year. It has been "hard times" in the South, and many a boy and girl who would like to have gone to school has been unable to do so.

Our schools have maintained a high standard of efficiency during the year under the direction of the Superintendent of Education. The courses of study have been revised in several of them—most thoroughly at Talladega and Straight. An effort has been made to put the training of teachers on a higher plane of efficiency, through the extensions of pedagogical courses and especially of practice teaching. Particular attention has been paid to the industries in our secondary schools. New departments of instruction have been introduced and special equipment provided. In seven schools this has been for domestic science, in three for wood-working, in two for agriculture, in two for natural and physical science and in one for an advanced commercial course. At Talladega the equipments for printing and for machine shop practice were for the first time fully installed and operated. A plan for the development of a group of our country boarding schools into distinctively agricultural high schools—say one in each state—has been ratified by your Committee and will be put in operation as rapidly as means are available.

Nothing is more embarrassing to your Committee than the appeals that come from our faithful workers for enlarged facilities, and sometimes even for ordinary conveniences, in their work. It is impossible for us to meet out of our regular current receipts the legitimate needs of the schools in this direction and we are compelled to rely upon special gifts from individuals.

In so large a system of schools as ours the demand for additional buildings, improvements and repairs is constant and pressing. Such additions or repairs have been made in a dozen or more schools during the past year. Extensive repairs have been made at Meridian, Miss., and Orange Park, Florida. At Grand View, Tenn., a seventy acre farm adjoining the school property, with two good houses and other buildings, has been purchased, and a substantial dining hall and domestic science building erected in place of the dining hall and dormitory destroyed by fire three years ago. Pleasant Hill, Tenn., has been provided, or has largely provided itself, with a much needed domestic science building. Joppa, Ala., has added a small boarding department to its large day school, by the purchase of adjoining property with two buildings, one of which has been transformed into a dormitory for girls and the other into a shop for boys. Athens, Ala., rejoices in a new school building on a new site, but still misses its teachers' home—everything having been destroyed by fire two years ago. The boys at Marion, Ala., have built a fine brick dormitory for themselves under the superintendence of their industrial teacher. At Thomasville, Ga., the persevering efforts of the principal through many years have been rewarded by a large addition to the school house and a new building for girls' industries. The irrepressible principal at Fessenden, Florida, has built a combined Carnegie library, dining hall and dormitory, and has secured additional land for farming. Florence, Ala., has a new playground and Cotton Valley, Ala., an addition to its school house. The town of Troy, N. C., has given our Academy a primary school building. Straight University has built and equipped the Tony Lafon Manual Training Building, at an expense of nearly ten thousand dollars,—the work being done by student labor under the direction of the superintendent of industries and the money provided by a bequest from a Negro citizen of New Orleans. A beautiful Carnegie Library is being erected at Fisk University, the corner stone of which was laid with impressive ceremonies last May, including an address by the then Secretary William H. Taft.

The enterprise and devotion of our principals and teachers are illustrated by this list of things accomplished during a particularly hard year. It is encouraging also to note the increased local interest in our work all through the South. This is shown in many ways,—by expressions of confidence and sympathy, by service on local advisory boards and by co-operation in raising money for the work. Talladega citizens, white and colored, have contributed liberally toward a nurse-training hospital which we hope soon to build. Local campaigns for funds to add to the school plants have been entered upon in Savannah and Charleston. The citizens of Saluda, N. C., have presented several acres of valuable land as an addition to our school plot and have promised a thousand dollars toward a new dormitory to be erected upon it.

Our chartered institutions are finding great difficulty in meeting their current expenses, which inevitably increase upon them with the years. Prices advance and schools will grow. The amounts which can be appropriated by this Association are necessarily insufficient. Our three largest institutions, Fisk, Talladega and Tougaloo, are carrying large deficits and are greatly hampered in their work. Piedmont College is bravely struggling to get upon its feet and meet the opportunity which awaits it as a Christian college for the young men and women of the mountains. Atlanta Theological Seminary faces an urgent future with financial resources utterly inadequate. These institutions—and others less advanced—but especially these institutions need immediate and liberal endowment. All five together have to-day endowments of less than $200,000. Your Committee has taken especial satisfaction in setting apart out of the receipts from the Williamsburg property $10,000 to Piedmont and $10,000 to Atlanta Theological Seminary, with the hope that this action on our part may induce others to give toward these endowments; and that our splendid institutions, especially these five, founded in prayer and maintained in sacrifice and faith may be more fully equipped for the great work to which in God's good providence they are called.

Some notable changes have occurred in our teaching force the past year. In addition to the hundred or more new teachers we are obliged to secure each year we have this year been called upon to fill the places of some whose terms of service have been unusually long and honorable. Dr. George W. Andrews has been in the work for thirty-seven years, the most of that time at the head of the theological department of Talladega College. Principal Andrew J. Steele has served thirty-nine years, thirty-five of these as principal of our largest and most successful day school, Le Moyne Institute at Memphis, Tenn. Professor Helen C. Morgan who resigned a year ago had given thirty-seven continuous years to Fisk University. Each of these has been retired on the Carnegie Foundation. Dr. James G. Merrill has resigned the presidency of Fisk University after nine laborious and fruitful years. Two new college presidents have just entered upon their office,—Rev. J. M. P. Metcalf at Talladega and Mr. Henry C. Newell at Piedmont. President S. G. Butcher has served one year at Straight. The presidency of Fisk has not yet been filled. We began last year with ten new principals in our secondary schools; we begin this year with six. They are all excellent men and women and good principals—some of them especially so—and we want no vacancies in 1909. The more than five hundred A. M. A. teachers in our southern field, in all grades from the kindergarten to the theological seminary, are a force for righteousness beyond all computation. A canvass was made last spring of a large number of northern Christian colleges, state universities and agricultural schools, for the special purpose of interesting students in our work and securing special trained workmen for our field. There is no stronger appeal to the educated young men and women of this country than that which we bring for the consecration of culture to the service of humanity and to the Christian solution of the most important social problem in our land and in the world to-day.

The religious character of our schools is everywhere most earnestly maintained. They are more than schools, they are missions. Our teachers are missionary teachers. Regular Bible instruction is given, and a Christian spirit is sought to pervade the institutions. In our boarding schools especially is this true. There are many conversions, and a constant training in Christian life and character.

An interesting occurrence of the year was the visit last summer of the Rev. Orishatukeh Faduma, principal of the Peabody Institute and pastor of the church at Troy, N. C., to his parents in Africa. This vacation visit home by one of our honored workers suggests the intimate relation of our colored work in the South with the millions of Negroes across the sea. The first mission of this Association was to Africa. Our interests there are continued by the Avery Fund, still held by us, from which nearly $4,000 income goes annually to support the African missions of the American Board. Several graduates of our higher institutions are now missionaries in Africa under the Southern Presbyterian Board and others are preparing themselves for this service. One of these missionaries is to address the Association at this Annual Meeting.

In addition to the emphasis given by our Association to its educational work we are assisting in the support of some two hundred Congregational churches in the South. These are in the highlands and the lowlands, and are both white and colored.

Professor Kelly Miller of Howard University tells us that in the United States the Negroes have a higher average of church membership than the whites and constitute one-fifth of the numerical strength of the protestant denominations. He further states that ninety-eight per cent. of all Negro protestants are Baptists and Methodists. "Presbyterians and Congregationalists" he adds "have spent many millions of dollars among the freedmen of the South, but the result is seen rather in intellectual and moral uplift than in religious proselytism. The real religious advantage of their work consists largely in its reflex influence on the Methodist and Baptist denominations." This is the clear and sufficient reason why we have so few Negro Congregational churches in connection with our educational work. We do not establish churches unless there is a definite need of them. Such need there has been and will continue to be in a good many places. The churches themselves will ordinarily be small in membership and will for a long time need the encouragement and support of their sister churches in the North; but they have an influence far beyond their relative numerical strength —they stand for an intelligent faith and an ethical gospel, their ministers are trained men of good character and pure life, the moral and spiritual power of the churches is unquestioned, and as time goes on they will increase both in numbers and in strength. Our superintendent of Southern church work is sympathetic, faithful and efficient, and is helping on the good cause. A fair proportion of the churches are already self supporting, with well-equipped houses of worship, good organization and intelligent and attentive congregations. Two churches, Plymouth of Washington, D. C., and the First Congregational Church of Birmingham, Ala., have come to the dignity of full self-support during the year. Some others are slowly but surely advancing toward the same independence of missionary aid. One of the notable events of the year is the enterprise in which the First Congregational Church of Atlanta, one of our graduate churches, is now enlisted under the pastorate of an honored vice president of this Association—the erection of a $30,000 church building with elaborate provisions for institutional work. The consummation of this effort will give encouragement and promise to our church work throughout the South.

The fellowship of our colored Congregational churches is well maintained; the local and state Associations are usually well attended, and visitors invariably speak of the excellent spirit of the meetings and the practical and helpful discussions of vital questions of the day. The first colored Congregational club—the Strieby Congregational Club—was organized in Washington, D. C., last winter.

Our mountain churches have met with some reverses during the year. The shifting character of the population in mining towns and in the widely scattered country communities, has made it difficult for us to hold our own. The mountains are in the ferment of a new life; they are being exploited by greedy seekers after gain; they are passing through a transition period. While our schools are prosperous, our churches often meet with unexpected obstacles. Great praise is due to the few earnest and devoted ministers of Christ who are doing faithful and laborious service for these interesting people. The churches whose reports are most encouraging are in the larger, well established towns or in connection with our schools. These churches must therefore be strengthened and made centers of influence for the regions around. This policy, recommended by the retiring superintendent, will be vigorously pursued by the new leader, Rev. W. O. Berckman, and will be sustained by the pastors throughout the mountain field.

Our Blanche Kellogg Institute at Santurce has come into its own. The new buildings, which have been waited for so long, have been completed during the year, and the holiday season saw the school established in its new home. The buildings are substantial and graceful, and are a model of convenience for the work in hand—"Christian Endeavor Hall" and "Adams Chapel"—a Christian school, a Christian home and a Christian place of worship. The cost has been $18,000; and the money has been raised by the special gifts of Christian Endeavor Societies and individuals, the largest contributor being the venerable father of the young Christian Endeavor girl whose name the institution bears. The faithful principal of the past few years, for whose unselfish devotion to the school we shall be ever grateful, has withdrawn from the work, and the Institute enters the new year with an enlarged corps of teachers under an experienced principal.

Our missionary field at the east end of the island is still awaiting re-enforcement. The two ordained missionaries are bravely holding the field, and with three lady missionaries and six native preachers have maintained the work with great efficiency and good results. We have eight organized churches, and about fifty preaching stations in a densely populated and destitute portion of the island. A third ordained missionary is greatly needed. The thriving church at Humacao has been provided with a substantial church building, in a fine location facing the plaza, by the Congregational Church Building Society. There is a great need of chapels, with adjoining apartments for the preacher's home in the smaller towns. Such chapels can be built and furnished for from five hundred to a thousand dollars each.

An overture has been received from the Congregational Home Missionary Society suggesting the transfer to the American Missionary Association of the work now carried on by them in Cuba. The reasons suggested for this transfer were that the Society is over-burdened with important work in this country, that the union of all Spanish mission work under one direction is desirable and that church and evangelistic work in Cuba should be supplemented by educational work which the Society has no means for providing. It was felt also that the Cuban work needs to be greatly enlarged and strengthened. Your Committee was impressed by the grave importance of the question thus submitted to it, and gave the matter earnest and prayerful attention at several of its meetings, finally devoting a special session to its consideration. The result of its deliberations was embodied in the following vote, "Voted, That the request of the Congregational Home Missionary Society that the American Missionary Association shall take the church work of the Congregational Home Missionary Society in Cuba is regretfully declined, not because of any lack of sympathy, but because at this time the pressure of work already upon us is so heavy that we cannot do justice to it." A further communication was received from the Home Missionary Society offering to bear a proportionate part of the expense, but your Committee did not feel justified, with the means at its disposal, in assuming the financial responsibility involved in so large an addition to its present missionary operations for many years to come, except under the special direction of the Association at its Annual Meeting.

The Indians of Dakota are advancing steadily along the path of civilization. The passing years are witnessing marked changes both in their condition and their character. The education of children has become general not to say universal; the allotment of lands in severalty has gone steadily forward until nearly every Indian now possesses his or her individual piece of property, and more and more these lands are being occupied and cultivated; new lines of railway are extending into and across the reservations and white neighbors are coming in with their good and evil influence. All this makes the present a most critical time in the Indians' development. There never was a time when they more needed the sympathy, the counsel, the encouragment and support of Christian people.

Our missions are in four states, Nebraska, North and South Dakota and Montana, and in six Indian Reservations. We have twenty-one churches with 1,492 members. Three new churches have been organized during the year, Mdetanka Church at Cannon Ball, and the Gilbert Memorial and Miniskuya on the Rosebud. There has been a most encouraging awakening of the Indians of the Rosebud Reservation which furnishes a special opportunity for aggressive work. The patient labor of years at the Crow Agency is now bearing fruit and there seems to be the dawning of new day. Sixty-two have been baptized within a few months and a church will soon be organized. The Elbowood Hospital School has been opened on the Fort Berthold Reservation with its own appeal for support. The Rev. Mary C. Collins, after more than thirty years of self-denying service, has retired from the work. Miss Collins' name has become a household word among all lovers of our Indian missions. She has served with rare fidelity and singleness of aim for more than a generation and has witnessed a complete transformation in the character and life of the people under her care. As failing health compels the surrender of her arduous duties to other hands she retires from active service with the affection of her Indian wards and the gratitude of their friends.

The Santee Normal School continues its interesting and important work with unabated zeal. The various departments of the school have been efficiently maintained. Industrial training receives especial attention, instruction being given to the boys in printing, carpentry, blacksmithing and farming, and to the girls in cooking and sewing. The school buildings are in great need of renovation and repair and the shops should be refurnished with tools and other appliances.

ALASKA.

The Eskimo mission at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska, was never more successful or promising than it is to-day. The church reports 242 members, with 143 additions by confessions of faith, 58 adult and 25 infant baptisms, a Sunday school of 350 members, a parish of 175 families and contributions of $120. Three years ago Rev. James F. Cross went bravely to the rescue of this mission. For a year he served alone and was then joined by his young daughter. Wales is probably the largest Eskimo village in the world, the gathering place of the native hunters and fishers from a wide district up and down the coast and from across the Bering Strait. The church records just given are a partial indication of what has been accomplished. It might be added, however, that the warmth and devotion of the Eskimo Christians are in striking contrast to the chilliness of the climate. The reindeer herd, which is the industrial plant of the mission, has been wisely handled and placed upon a business basis. The support of this mission is looked for from special contributions. Mr. Cross has now returned to the States and will spend some months among our home churches in the interest of our Alaskan and Indian work. A new missionary is already on the field.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE MISSIONS.

The new problem of Oriental immigration demands the most serious consideration of American Christians. It is unquestionably true that "the immigration problem of the next hundred years will be the problem of Christianizing the multitudes of Orientals who come in across our western ocean." This includes Coreans, Hindoos and Chinese, but is especially true of the Japanese. Tens of thousands of Japanese are already settled on the Pacific Coast and in the Rocky Mountain district, and are moving onward into the Mississippi valley. Other thousands are halted at our borders waiting the opportunity to enter. These people when they come must be met with the gospel.

The agencies established by the California Oriental Mission, as auxiliary to this Association, have been improved and extended during the year and are accomplishing a great work. Appeals constantly come to us from other states for the establishment of similar missions, more particularly from Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Colorado. The Japanese Congregational Church at Seattle has had a successful year and is settling down to permanent and useful work. Other Japanese churches are asking our aid.

Significant additions have been made to our mission plants at several places, and the central Chinese Mission House at San Francisco is now in process of erection.

HAWAII.

Dr. Doremus Scudder, whose enthusiastic appeal for Hawaii prepared the way for the Association four years ago to take shares in the work, has resigned the secretaryship of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association and become pastor of the great Union Church of Honolulu. Rev. William Brewster Oleson has succeeded him as secretary. It is not easy to lodge a new appeal in the hearts of our American churches, and we confess to some disappointment in the receipts for this very attractive and important work. Every consideration of sentiment, interest and patriotism leads us to give it a cordial and generous support.

The recent report of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association is full of hopefulness. "We are" it says "in the opening chapters of a new era in the territory of Hawaii, in our social, educational and religious advancement." The native churches are recovering their lost vigor and are growing in efficiency and strength. The Japanese, Chinese and Portuguese churches have had a fruitful year. It has been a time of general spiritual awakening. Five hundred and thirty-five have been added to the one hundred and one churches on confession of faith. The American Missionary Association has become responsible for the salary of a Sunday school missionary who has already entered upon his work. He is of good Hawaiian stock, the son of a late Chief Justice of the territory and the grandson of a missionary.

FINANCIAL.

The receipts for current work for the fiscal year ending September 30th were as follows:

From donations	$183,213.10
" Legacies	115,775.91
" Income	23,187.43
" Tuition	61,052.37
" Slater Fund	4,500.00
Total	$387,728.81
The expenditures were	$379,695.55
A credit balance on the year of	$8,033.26
Debt from previous years	54,951.18
Debt balance Sept. 30th, 1908	$46,917.92

The donations from Churches, Sunday Schools and other organizations were $1,448.44 less and from Individuals $19,877.77 less, making the total from donations $21,326.21 less than the previous year. The receipts from Legacies were $9,422.99 less and from Tuition $2,543.82 less and from Income $3,283.14 more than for the previous year. The net decrease in receipts was $30,009.88. The decrease in expenditures was $25,081.71 making the net decrease balance of $4,928.17. But the credit balance on the previous year was $12,961.43. The credit balance on this year is $8,033.26; the difference being $4,928.17 in comparison with the previous year. This is the third year in which the Association has reported a credit balance at the end of the year. During these three years the debt balance of $89,254.07 has been reduced to $46,917.92.

The decrease in receipts and the enforced reductions in expenditures cause much concern and distress, yet your Executive Committee felt compelled to take this very conservative course. Your Committee is, however, very hopeful that with improved financial conditions throughout the country the present debt of the Association will be paid and the work maintained and enlarged to meet more adequately the requirements in its growing missionary fields.

In addition to the current receipts the Association has also received the following funds for endowments:

The Brown Fund for Colored People, additional	$105.00
" Mrs. P. A. Livermore Fund, additional	339.32
Total	$444.32

The Association has also received $15,000.00 in Securities to create a fund to be known as The Gregory Fund, the income of which, after life intersts, to be devoted to the purchase of character-forming books for distribution in the South, etc. There has also been received the sum of $20,350.00 as donations under the Conditional Gift Plan, and there has been transferred by death of donors from The Conditional Gift Fund to current work and to Reserve Conditional Gift Accounts $5,600.00. Your Committee most heartily commends the Conditional Gift Plan to the friends of the Association who are desirous of making exceptional donations while they live, yet wish to provide themselves with an assured annual income during life.

THE DANIEL HAND EDUCATIONAL FUND.

THE DANIEL HAND INCOME.

There has been received as income from the Daniel Hand Fund for educational work among the Colored People in the South

the sum of	$77,173.09
which with the balance of	5,241.45
on hand at the beginning of the year made the total	$82,414.54
There has been expended the sum of	79,817.03
Balance in hand and appropriated	$2,597.51

There has also been received from the Administrator of the Daniel Hand Estate the sum of $50,000.00 which has been added to the Daniel Hand Educational Fund.

This year completes a period of twenty years since Daniel Hand, in his lifetime, made to the Association the great gift of $1,000,894.25 in securities. There has been added to this fund from time to time, from the Estate of Daniel Hand, the sum of $464,965.00 making the total of The Daniel Hand Educational Fund received to September 30th, 1908, $1,465,859.25. This fund and the income received have been kept separate and distinct from the other funds of the Association and the accounts have also been kept separate and distinct as required by the terms and conditions of the trust.

There has been collected as income during this period of twenty years the sum of $1,232,180.05 and there has been expended the sum of $1,229,582.54, leaving a balance in hand and appropriated $2,587.51.

It is very significant and worthy of special mention that Daniel Hand resided in the South and carried on business enterprises for about twenty years until the exigencies of the Civil War made it necessary for him to return to the North. His fortune was made in the South and he knew from personal knowledge the cruel wrongs of slavery and the needs of the Colored people and their desire for an education. He clearly saw the imperative importance of a truly Christian education for this needy people just taking on the duties and responsibilities of racial life, and testified to his confidence in our methods in his munificent endowment.

While reviewing the twenty year period of the Daniel Hand Fund it will be of interest to note that the current receipts and Endowments to the Association exclusive of the Daniel Hand Fund and its income and exclusive of income from the Avery Fund, assigned for support of missionary work in Africa and paid over to the American Board ($84,419.02) during this period, have been $6,928,237.81, and including the Daniel Hand Fund and income and the income for missionary work in Africa, the total receipts for the twenty years are $10,230,569.87.

BUREAU WOMAN'S WORK.

There have been contributed to the American Missionary Association through the Women's Organizations $33,235.86 which is the largest total received in any year. This gain is most encouraging. Much has been done during the year in distribution of literature and furnishing speakers. The Secretary of the Woman's Bureau also has represented the A. M. A. work at several of the State and County Annual Meetings besides speaking at meetings of local societies. We welcome thankfully the interest in and support to this work on the part of Women's Organizations.

AMONG OUR CONSTITUENTS.

In the financial statement of this report it will be noticed that there has been a decrease to the considerable amount of $3,642.00 in the expense of getting information before our constituent churches through literature, public addresses of representatives of the A. M. A. and other similar means. Not only has the mission field suffered painfully in the retrenchment of the year but this decreased expenditure of effort among the churches has also been serious. Your committee rejoices in the fact that there is a constantly increased demand for the literature published by the Association. During the year just closed this demand has been only partially met because of the determination to keep the expenses down to the lowest possible limit. The voice of the churches was so urgent that the debt should not be increased during this current year that your committee has adopted the uncertain experiment of reducing the amount expended in various efforts for holding our old constituency and reaching a larger one. Possibly the decrease in donations is partly attributable to this decrease in effort. Rigid economy seemed to demand it.
